GOOD DEEDS

Thursday, January 17th is the 9th annual "DAY OF GOOD DEEDS" hosted by the White Hat Coalition each year as a day that serves as a reminder that each day is a good day to perform a "random act of kindness".

UMW AND LOCAL OFFICIALS CONTINUE ANNUAL SAFETY DIALOGUE

University of Montana Western and area health and safety officials met recently in an ongoing effort to ensure safety and security for the 1,400-student campus.

Montana Western Chancellor Richard Storey said the group meets on a regular basis to review emergency preparedness planning, discuss national and local health and safety issues and share information.

"As a university we are very fortunate to have such a close relationship with local law enforcement and first responder agencies," Storey said. "The safety and security of our students, faculty and staff is of the upmost importance to us."

The group discussed ongoing preparedness planning, campus access for emergency vehicles and health issues including the flu epidemic that is effecting states across the country.

Montana Western Dean of Students Nicole Hazelbaker reported on a recent Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) conference she and Dillon Police Chief Paul Craft attended in which the preparedness and cooperative efforts of the university and community were lauded by federal and state officials.

Participants included Craft; Jay Hansen, Beaverhead County sheriff; Mike McGinley, Dillon Volunteer Fire Department chief; Sue Hansen, director of Beaverhead County Public Health; David Marx, director of Disaster and Emergency Services (DES); as well as the university's senior staff and facilities administrators.

Montana Western is unique in that it relies on local police and fire departments, as well as emergency planning and public health services. Many other colleges and universities maintain a campus police force. Storey said the close cooperation between local police and sheriff departments is exceptional and helps ensure that the students, faculty and staff at Montana Western receive the best in professional services.

FINISHES INTERNSHIP IN BRAZIL

Raised on a ranch in Boulder, Mont., Kindle McCauley grew up around horses. Last summer, the 22-year old University of Montana Western senior found herself working with horses on the other side of the equator.

As part of her education, McCauley spent one month outside of Santana de Deserto in Minas Gerais, Brazil for her internship at the Haras Capim Fino stud farm.

McCauley's connection to Brazil began with her grandparents, who worked for the Smith Ranch outside of Boulder. The McCauley and Smith ranch partnership spans three generations, and Kindle began working for Tresa Smith in 2002. Tresa Smith is known for introducing the exotic Brazilian horse breed Mangalarga Marchador to Montana.

When McCauley told Smith about her requirement for an internship to graduate, Smith suggested traveling to Brazil to work at Haras Capim Fino. Smith funded the entire internship for McCauley.

McCauley arrived in Minas Gerais on May 5, 2012. Her work included exercising and training the horses, and as part of this work she rode the ranch's top stallions, show horses and colts. Through her work in Brazil, McCauley is now listed as a trainer for Mangalarga Marchadors in the United States.

In addition to learning about the ranch's horses, McCauley said the experience taught her much more.

"I learned a lot about respect and honesty," McCauley said. "Despite the language barriers, my hosts were very personable and hospitable."

McCauley will graduate in May 2013 with a Bachelor of Science in Natural Horsemanship with an option in Management. After graduation, she plans to pursue a career in ranching. She would like to continue working with horses, including the Mangalarga Marchador.

Montana Western is the only university in the nation to offer a four-year degree in natural horsemanship.

"Before I came to Montana Western, I was just an old cowpoke," McCauley joked. "But now, I am a horsewoman. What I learned in the classroom allowed me to converse with other trainers on a professional level, scholar to scholar. I wouldn't have had this opportunity without the things I learned here."

UMW VOLLEYBALL SIGNS WASHINGTON RECRUIT

University of Montana Western head coach Lisa Griffiths announced another recruit for the 2013 volleyball season; Jessie Glidewell of Colville, Wash. signed a Frontier Conference/NAIA Letter of Intent and will compete with the Bulldogs in 2013.

"Jessie is the perfect fit for our university and volleyball program," Griffiths said. "She is a great athlete with plenty of potential to develop into a dominant outside hitter. I'm excited to get her in the gym and watch her grow."

Glidewell, a 5'10" outside hitter, was a member of the Colville High School volleyball, basketball and equestrian teams. As a sophomore and junior, her volleyball team finished as league, district and regional champions. Her sophomore team went on to place fifth in State 1A and won it all in Glidewell's junior season.

During her senior season, Glidewell led her team to another league and district title as well as a fourth place finish in State 2A. Her 219 kills, 0.315 hitting percentage, 30 aces and 12 blocks earned her first-team Great Northern League honors. As a three-year varsity player, Glidewell helped her team amass a 98-8 record.

"We are adding another proven winner to Bulldog volleyball," Griffiths continued. "Coming from a high school program with a history of success, Jessie will be ready to compete right away and knows what kind of hard work it takes to have a championship season."

Glidewell is the daughter of Bill and Kelly Glidewell and plans to major in equine studies at Montana Western.

"I knew I wanted to attend UMW after spending several days participating in the volleyball camp last August," Glidewell said. "I enjoyed the small town environment, friendly college staff and positive atmosphere shown by everyone on the team."
