RESTRICT BISON

This session of the Legislature is working on controlling the size of the herd of buffalo and putting restricts on where the wild animals can be moved to.

The bills two sides have different views on the issue. One side says the time for buffalo roaming free has passed and the the wildlife supporters would like to see the bison roam free on the grasslands where they used to. The grassland such as the Charles Russell National Wildlife Reserve is one such place with 1.1 million acres of prairie that the wildlife supporters believe should be open for the bison. The farmers and ranchers in the area contend that the relocation of bison to the area could harm ranches in the area.

Senate Bill 143 goes directly after the bison being moved out of Yellowstone Park. The bill is also to downsize the herds there in the Park by allowing more hunting in the season than there is now.

Farmers and ranchers say on the biggest threats is the spread of brucellosis from the buffalo across the state to cattle. The buffalo can easily cause the cattle problems along with the damage done to private property such as knocking down fences.

Senate Bill 256 would make Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks responsible should the bison relocated damage private property. While a third bill in the Legislature is on its way to Governor Bullocks desk after passing the house and senate. That bill 305 would classify the wild bison as domesticated animals if they have been kept in captivity or been privately owned.

One thing is certain, the bison issue is not going away soon. The answers are a long way down the road and the tax payers will spend years paying to fight either way.

HISTORY & REALITY:

By: MJ

Today's culture has evolved into a never-never land with no past, no future and with the present available cyber space games at their finger tips.

Having historical understanding of the history of science, literature, mathematics and the arts matures and uplifts the soul. Is the education system today skirting the hard work of gaining knowledge, and wisdom from past history?

Denying our history can be destructive however; having debates about differences will help expand and enhance our understanding of human development. Studying the virtues and vices of historical figures helps us to mature in our own lives by discerning our own weaknesses and taking steps to improve.

Historical knowledge is a prerequisite for understanding the world in which we live.

Marcus Tullius Cicero, a Roman philosopher, wrote: "Not to know what happened before you were born, that is to be always a boy, to be forever a child."
