Welborn's Weekly Legislative Review

Up to this point this point during this this legislative session, things have been relatively calm, however, last Friday, we found ourselves caught up in one of the most contentious days to date. All the action was in the Senate, rather than the House of Representatives, but even so, this type of action affects the entire legislative body, and reflects poorly on the precess. I would also submit that the potential effects of this kind of political gamesmanship can have negative repercussions on the entire process.

So, what happened? I'll get right to the point with the facts, not opinion, but again the facts.

Simply put, any proposals that come before the legislature, including referendums (a measure passed on or proposed by a legislative body that is placed on ballot to be submitted to a popular vote of you the voters) have transmittal deadlines. Last Friday represented a deadline for referendums transmittal. Due to a couple referendums that were opposed by the Democratic minority, which motivated them to use the process of a "missing Senator" and the" call" of the body to delay Legislative action for 1 full day.

Had this maneuver worked, it would have effectively "killed" both referendums due to missed deadlines. I certainly understand that it can be frustrating to be in the minority, with process often being the only real recourse. On the other hand and also fair to the process, The Majority responded to this tactic by creating a scenario where the motion to delay was not recognized. The Majority simply felt that it was inappropriate to allow process alone to defeat legislation, without giving the Members on the floor of the Senate the opportunity to vote on these issues. As a result of all of this, emotions ran high and chaos resulted as this played out. In particular, the minority party in the Senate started pounding on desks and shouting. They also brought in partisan political operatives to stand in the gallery and shout, trying to drown out opposition. I will editorialize by saying that any breach of decorum and especially one of this magnitude, cast a dark cloud on the entire process.

It was indeed a very dark moment, and in the words of a long time Democrat Legislator, "In my 30 plus years experience in the Montana Legislature, this was indeed a very bad day, and he also stated that "it's especially disappointing that the breakdown in decorum was caused by his own party."

While, pragmatically I try to understand why both sides acted as they did, my real concern is that this type maneuver, when used as an end around the process, risks making Montana more partisan. A reporter asked me later, "Will this destroy the bipartisan solutions that have been more commonplace this session and what the vast majority of Montanans advocate for?" I answered simply, "Only if we let it", and I would hope we do not."

Please allow me to share some perspective on referendums. I have said many times before, I am not a huge fan of referendums or initiatives for that matter. A Representative Republic (A citizen Legislature) works best when issues are fully vetted through the full 90 day, multiple hearing, multiple committees, multiple floor vote and Governor signing process. The voter weighs in via their Representative choice and numerous public hearings. Complex topics, which are often emotional and require substantial revision during the legislative process, typically don't lend themselves well to the initiative or referendum process. Quite frankly, the vast majority of initiatives and referendums represent a failure of the Legislature doing it's job, or furthermore allows forcircumventing the process. The unintended consequences of The medical marijuana ballot initiative epitomizes my concerns.

That said, there are some topics however that I still support sending to the voter, in particular in the area of voter rights. The referendums that generated this turmoil fit this definition.

SB405 simply asks the question of whether the voter wished to continue same day registration or not. In my rural District, same day registration was not an issue, but in urban areas, and in particular, certain college towns, same day registration resulted in lines and delays that disenfranchised some voters that had preregistered. It is reasonable for the voter to weigh in on voter registration as it is a process they are directly familiar with.

SB 408 which is a referendum that would create a single ticket primary where the top two vote getters, irrespective of party, continue on to the general. This further ensures that the ultimate victor will actually receive the majority of the vote. Again, as a ballot issue, it is appropriate that voters weigh in directly. I support this simply because, the current practice of making a voter choose either a Republican or Democratic ballot in the primary is flawed. Montanans are independent ticket splitters who often personally know the candidates, have legitimate personal reasons and thus should not be forced to choose a single party ticket.

Regardless of my personal opinion on these specific referendums, I simply don't support the use of process to block the legitimate Legislative path. I have often voiced my disagreement with using gamesmanship by either side of the aisle throughout my tenure, as it further drives partisanship and serves no purpose other than staging political theatre. I have joined in the past, with the minority in defeating gaming by the majority, and in this scenario, I stand with the rest of the majority against this gambit by the minority. These actions become an unneeded distraction from the job at hand, and much like a storm, spread to destroy areas that are unrelated. It is time for all elected legislators to either choose to be part of the solution, or remain part of the problem.

In closing however this is an isolated incidence, and overall we've all held to our goal of more work and less politics this session.

Shifting gears, SB 175 Senator Jones' Flagship Education Funding Bill of the session, is being heard in House Education as I write this Column, I will will further discuss this proposal next week, as I recap what this measure contains and key in on what it proposes to accomplish.

As always, your input is welcome. You can call 444-4800 any time to express your opinion on any legislation. Please feel free to stay in touch
