Tips for Dealing with Drought on Range

Drought is a serious obstacle to successful range livestock management. Producers must understand how drought affects plants, grazing animals, and livestock management, and what options exist.

- Forage production is decreased dramatically, but reductions are less on ranges in good and excellent ecological condition.
- Ability of perennial plants to recover after drought is closely related to their vigor before and during the drought. Excessive grazing (more than 60 percent of current year's growth) decreases the ability of some plants to recover. Moderate use (25 to 55 percent) does not seem to affect the recovery rate.

- Livestock numbers must be reduced according to forage supply. Yearlings should be marketed early, while calves should be weaned early and fed at home, at another feedlot, or sold. Cull low-producing cows.

- Retaining a rotational grazing system during drought is recommended over continuous grazing. Periodic rests help plants maintain vigor. Plants are not able to regrow if grazed repeatedly.

- Concentrating more animals into a single herd is recommended over having several smaller herds. By having more animals in a pasture, the entire pasture will be grazed more uniformly, and more use will be made of the less-preferred plants

- Supplement low-quality feed. Feed supplements can often be used to correct low forage quality. However, feed supplements are usually not an economical substitute for range forage.

- Try not to buy, or put up, weed-infested hay. The future cost of feeding weed-infested hay far outweighs its feed value in the short-run. If weedy hay must be fed, feed in an area or holding pasture that is removed from streams, riparian areas, and wooded areas. Be sure to keep your stock confined for several days after feeding the bad hay to prevent them from spreading viable seed through their digestive tract. Observe holding pastures and feeding areas closely, and treat weed infestations.

- Try to take advantage of areas dominated with annual species. They should be grazed early in the season when their nutrient value is high. This will allow grazing deferment on the higher-condition range dominated with perennial plants.

- Graze crested wheatgrass early and longer than normal. It is one of our plants most tolerant of grazing.

- Keep cattle on subirrigated sites longer than usual. Fertilizer could be used to increase forage production on many of these sites. However, fertilizer is a cash cost, and soils should be tested before fertilizer is applied.

- If irrigation water is less than usual, concentrate it on your best-producing hay meadows. Graze the rest.

- Keep accurate cost data during normal years. Management decisions are easier to make if production costs during a drought year can be compared to the normal situation.

•You must maintain adequate water for the livestock. Dry cows use less water than lactating cows and will graze farther from water. In some areas you may be able to develop a spring or seep (a flow of 1/2 gallon per minute amounts to 720 gallons per day). Consider the possibility of installing a larger storage tank and piping water to troughs. You may need to install high-pressure plastic pipe to carry water from a central source. Although expensive initially, pipelines will prove useful for many years. Hauling stock water is expensive. However, it may be a viable strategy in some situations.

•Do not restock until you are certain that your range has recovered.

Rumsey Gulch Fire

Detected: May 13, 2013, Cause: Under Investigation
Location: Approximately four miles SE of Philipsburg, MT
Jurisdiction: MT DNRC, Beaverhead-Deerlodge National Forest, Granite County Size: 350 acres Containment: 0%
Structures Lost: 5 homes and numerous outbuildings
Resources: • 8 Engines, 4 Hand Crews, 2 dozers, 1 Excavator, 3 Helicopters

Summary: Firefighters continue to work to establish a fireline around the perimeter of the fire and provide structure protection in the Rumsey Gulch area. Residents have been allowed to return to their homes but should use caution when driving and watch for fire traffic. Management of the fire is transitioning to a Type 3 Incident Management Team under the direction of Jonathan Clark. Officials are asking travelers to be cautious while driving in these areas to provide for the safety of firefighters and publics.

Registration $10.00—includes lunch at the UMW Cafeteria

Sponsored by the Beaverhead Conservation District Range Committee

Featured Speaker: Guy Glosson

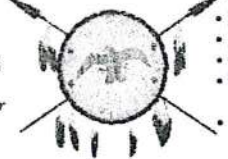

Guy Glosson is from Texas—but don't let that put you off this seminar. Guy's engaging approach to range management—low-stress livestock handling, grazing plans, budgeting and financial planning, and wildlife management, are guaranteed to get you thinking... It's all about your personal philosophy or mission, and working in sync with the natural cycles of plants and animals. What he does: I am not in the business of making recommendations; my job is to help you make better decisions.

Glosson manages the Mesquite Ranch near Snyder, Texas. A range management consultant and trainer, he is a graduate of the Texas Christian University ranch management program, a registered educator with Holistic Management International, and has worked 25 years in ranch management and ranching.

Stockman Bank offers the following tips to help parents make every day "Savings Day:"

- Help kids open up their own bank savings account and make deposits regularly.
- Kids love to get mail, so encourage them to keep an eye out for their quarterly statement.
- Talk to your child about the family budget. Include a discussion on wants and needs. Reinforce this by budgeting for a family outing or purchase.
- While children know that money does not grow on trees, they may think it comes out of a wall. Show them how an ATM works and explain that to take money out of the bank you must first put it in.
- Give your kids positive feedback. As they get older, give them responsibility over how they spend their money.

Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks

NEWS

LANDOWNER TELLS FWP HE WILL FORFEIT PERMISSION TO KILL SECOND WOLF

The Gardiner area landowner who lost thirteen of his sheep to wolves late last month has asked Fish, Wildlife and Parks to amend his shoot on site permit granting permission to take a second wolf. The landowner says he will be shipping his cow/calf pairs which were grazing in the area of the depredation to summer pasture in another location at the end of the week, while his remaining live sheep were moved immediately following the depredation event. Therefore, the landowner says there will no longer be a need for the permit.

In response to the landowner's request, FWP has revised the shoot on site permit issued on April 24 to expire on May 18, 2013 rather than June 8, 2013 in support of this good-faith gesture. Consistent with this action, cattle producers issued a shoot on sight permit always have the option not to use a kill permit issued to them.

The landowner legally shot and killed a wolf on May 6, 2013. This wolf (a collared female) had returned to the site where the landowner's sheep were killed. FWP believes the wolf killed by the landowner was likely one of the two animals responsible for the depredation event. FWP investigated claims that this landowner baited the wolves and determined them to be unfounded. Further, despite some false reports, the carcasses of the dead sheep were all moved off-site to avoid conflict, except for one that was mostly consumed by a bear a few days after the depredation.

Montana routinely issues shoot on sight permits to assist livestock owners in removing depredating or offending wolves that return to the localized area associated with a confirmed depredation. This assists FWP in preventing further conflicts where risk of depredation continues.

FWP is charged with managing a fully recovered, robust wolf population that thrives on multiple-use landscapes outside of protected areas. Since gray wolves were reintroduced in the Northern Rockies, lethal removal of problem individual wolves has been recognized as necessary means to promote conservation of non-depredating wolves while accounting for wolf effects on local livelihoods. A single wolf associated with a depredation, and removed from a population, does not biologically threaten the local or regional wolf population.

According to FWP's annual wolf conservation and management report, there was a minimum of 625 wolves at the end of 2012 statewide in 147 packs and 37 breeding pairs. For more information on FWP's management of wolves and their population, you can go to: <http://fwp.mt.gov/fishAndWildlife/management/wolf/>.
