Doctors make progress toward 'artificial pancreas'

Associated Press By MARILYNN MARCHIONE

Doctors are reporting a major step toward an "artificial pancreas," a device that would constantly monitor blood sugar in people with diabetes and automatically supply insulin as needed.

A key component of such a system — an insulin pump programmed to shut down if blood-sugar dips too low while people are sleeping — worked as intended in a three-month study of 247 patients.

This "smart pump," made by Minneapolis-based Medtronic Inc., is already sold in Europe, and the U.S. Food and Drug Administration is reviewing it now. Whether it also can be programmed to mimic a real pancreas and constantly adjust insulin based on continuous readings from a blood-sugar monitor requires more testing, but doctors say the new study suggests that's a realistic goal.

"This is the first step in the development of the artificial pancreas," said Dr. Richard Bergenstal, diabetes chief at Park Nicollet, a large clinic in St. Louis Park, Minn. "Before we said it's a dream. We have the first part of it now and I really think it will be developed."

The study involved people with Type 1 diabetes, the kind usually diagnosed during childhood. About 5 percent of the 26 million Americans with diabetes have this type. Their bodies don't make insulin, a hormone needed to turn food into energy. That causes high blood-sugar levels and raises the risk for heart disease and many other health problems.

Some people with the more common Type 2 diabetes, the kind linked to obesity, also need insulin and might also benefit from a device like an artificial pancreas. For now, though, it's aimed at people with Type 1 diabetes who must inject insulin several times a day or get it through a pump with a narrow tube that goes under the skin.

A big danger is having too much insulin in the body overnight, when blood-sugar levels naturally fall. People can go into comas, suffer seizures and even die. Parents of children with diabetes often worry so much about this that they sneak into their bedrooms at night to check their child's blood-sugar monitor.

In the study, all patients had sensors that continuously monitored their blood sugar. Half of them had ordinary insulin pumps and the others had pumps programmed to stop supplying insulin for two hours when blood-sugar fell to a certain threshold.

Over three months, low-sugar episodes were reduced by about one-third in people using the pump with the shut-off feature. Importantly, these people had no cases of severely low blood sugar — the most dangerous kind that require medical aid or help from another person. There were four cases in the group using the standard pump.

"As a first step, I think we should all be very excited that it works," an independent expert, Dr. Irl Hirsch of the University of Washington in Seattle, said of the programmable pump.

The next step is to test having it turn off sooner, before sugar falls so much, and to have it automatically supply insulin to prevent high blood sugar, too.

Dr. Anne Peters, a diabetes specialist at the University of Southern California, said the study "represents a major step forward" for an artificial pancreas.

One participant, Spears Mallis, 34, a manager for a cancer center in Gainesville, Ga., wishes these devices were available now. He typically gets low-sugar about 8 to 10 times a week, at least once a week while he's asleep.

"I would set an alarm in the middle of the night just to be sure I was OK. That will cause you to not get a good night of rest," he said.

His "smart pump" stopped giving insulin several times during the study when his sugar fell low, and he wasn't always aware of it. That's a well-known problem for people with Type 1 diabetes — over time, "you become less and less sensitive to feeling the low blood sugars" and don't recognize symptoms in time to drink juice or do something else to raise sugar a bit, he said.

Besides Medtronic, Johnson & Johnson and several other research groups are working on artificial pancreas devices.

Great turnout for the 18th Annual Auto Festival & Cruise

The 18th annual Auto Festival & Cruise had a great turnout despite threatening weather last Saturday. Over 50 entries were on hand for a fun, laid-back event that included a free BBQ and vintage and classic vehicles from seven surrounding counties as well as a handful from Idaho and a couple from Oregon. The success of this family friendly event is a tribute to all of the volunteers that work hard each year to bring a quality show to the downtown business area and a safe, beautiful cruise on one of Montana's best scenic byways.

Entry winners this year are: Best street rod; Darrell Johnson, 1940 Ford. Muscle car pre 1972; Mark Hall, 1972 Grand Torino Sport. Muscle car 1972+; Mike Paddock, Mustang GT. 4X4 truck; Mike Atwood, 1943 Ford JPW. 4X4 Compact; Lee & Lori Hiniker, 1969 Ford Bronco. 2 wheel drive truck; Don DeBrita, 1955 Chevy half ton. Best Import; Derek Gore, 1958 Tank. Best Original; Frank Pandrotti, 1960 Chevy Impala. Best Custom; George Smith, 1950 Ford half ton. Best Motorcycle, George Schisler, 1942 Harley Davidson. People's choice; Sally Foster, 1971 Mustang Boss. Best of Show; Mike Atwood, 1943 Ford JPW.

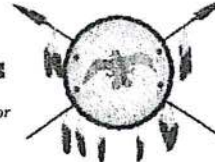

Each year the White Hat Coalition and Performance Truck & Auto team up to host one of Montana's longest running car show events to show community support for our troops and veterans. They wish to thank all the volunteers and sponsors that helped to make this years show possible. Most of all, they wish to thank all our men and women serving our country that make it possible for our community to celebrate a great American tradition in relative safety as they serve around the world. Lastly, thank you to their families for all your sacrifices as you keep the home fires burning.

Red Hat Society News

Wednesday, June 19th, The Red Hat Belles car pooled to the Hitchin' Post in Melrose for lunch. Door prizes were awarded to Marion Williams, Eleanor Brush and Betty Lou Nakano. A Thank you gift was also given to "Pete" Tarleton in recognition of the help she has given to the hostesses.

Since many ladies go on vacation or have family come to visit them in the summer, The Red Hat Belles unanimously voted that activities for July and August be omitted. We will start again in September. At this time, Lois Smith and Inez Reynolds volunteered as our co-hostesses.

We want to thank the staff of the Hitchin' Post for their fine service and fine food. Last, but not least, we wish to offer a special thank you to our co-hostesses, Darlene Rose and Trudy Carlin, for making this a very enjoyable event.

Mazy's Traveling Teapot
by Jean Tilton James

(4th installment - continued from June 19th)

Mazy still missed Grandma Jenny. She started to be afraid she wouldn't remember what her grandmother looked like or how her voice sounded when she told her stories. It seemed like they would never get to Montana Territory.

This part of the trip seemed really frightening as the grownups talked about possible attacks by warring Indians. Mazy remembered her almost Indian friend back at Fort Abercrombie and thought that she didn't look scary. During this part of the trip, Mother made her ride in the wagon and read to Benjamin from the same old story-books. Mazy knew them by heart by now, so sometimes she took out her sketchbook and drew pictures of things that Benjamin named. It was a good game. She also figured out how to teach Benjamin to help her make a cat's cradle out of a circle of yarn. Once in a while for a big treat, father let her ride with him on Blaze. Sometimes, he also took Benjamin for a ride, which made Mazy a little jealous, because it seemed like Benjamin got to ride more than she did. Mother said to be more charitable and to enjoy her blessings. Mazy had to agree, because if Benjamin was riding with Father, at least he wasn't bothering her.

One day, Benjamin was especially naughty. Mazy climbed back to sit with her feet dangling out of the back of the wagon. She crossed her arms and knew she had a pout on her face. She sat there thinking about the teapot story Grandma Jenny had told her. Grandma Jenny's teapot had traveled across the ocean from Ireland. It had not been broken, because Grandma Jenny had wrapped it in her good dress. Right this minute, Mazy wished she could have a cup of Grandma Jenny's special rosehips tea with honey. Pretty soon, tears were falling on her pinafore. Just then, Benjamin crawled up next to her and patted her on the shoulder. Mazy put her arm around him, and they sat there watching the land they had already traveled through slide out from under the wagon wheels. Mazy knew she loved her brother, even if he tried her patience and just wouldn't stop asking, "Are we there yet?"

It was that evening, just about sunset, when father hurried to the wagon to get his big gun. He whispered something quietly to Mother and then rode away. Mother had a worried look on her face. She gathered Mazy and Benjamin close to her and said that they must pray for Father's safety. Some Indians had been traveling beside the wagon train, but they were quite a distance away. Just now, Captain Fisk had seen a delegation coming toward the camp. The captain felt that it would be best to meet with them and see what they wanted. Father and some other men were going with him.

Mazy felt little prickles of fear run up and down her spine. Mother sat down by the fire where she could still see the men leaving the camp. Then she bowed her head and began to pray. "God in Heaven, please be with thy servant George as he seeks to protect us." Mazy looked up to see other mothers and children joining in her mother's prayers. Then one of the ladies began to sing "Nearer My God To Thee," and everyone joined in.

After what seemed forever to Mazy, Uncle Charlie limped up to the group by the fire. He had been gored by an oxen a few days earlier and moved kind of slowly. "I think they are on their way back," he said. "They aren't riding very fast, so I think everything must be fine."

Uncle Charlie was right, but Mazy hugged her father extra hard that night before she climbed into her bed in the wagon.

After all the days had started to blend together and Mazy's sketchbook was almost full, they finally reached Fort Benton. The streets were crowded with lots of travelers. Mazy heard a strange whistling sound coming from the river and she saw her first steamboat. It was bringing more travelers and supplies. Father bought mother a new stew pot to replace the one that had bounced out of the wagon when no one was looking. Mazy had suspicions that Benjamin might have thrown it out to see it bounce, but she didn't want to be a tattletale.

Soon they were on the road again and headed to a place called Alder Gulch. Father and Uncle Charlie talked about getting settled and they drew pictures of machinery on the side of the wagon with little flat pencils. Mother seemed tired most of the time, and Mazy tried hard to help her. She overheard Mother talking one day to the lady everyone called Miz Betsy. "I'm probably in the family way again," she had sighed. Mazy wondered what that meant and finally asked her mother.

The Children's Writing Corner

with Jeannie James

We have received the prelude to a novel that is being written by 12 year old Rachel Towery. It is exciting to find a young person willing to work that hard on her writing. Her effort shows real talent and we want to encourage her to continue with her story. We will publish an excerpt from her prelude in tomorrow's Dillonite Daily. Congratulations Rachel.

Please keep your submissions coming. You can email your poems, stories and illustrations to womacks_printing@bresnan.net.

Logging Begins Near Storm & Georgetown Lake

The Pintler Ranger District is advising travelers in the Storm Lake and Georgetown Lake areas that logging of the "Peterson Roadside Hazard Reduction" project will begin south of Philipsburg on Forest Service roads #893 (Blodgett Road), and #672 (East Fork Road).

Iron Pine Logging will begin work to remove hazardous trees along these Forest Service Roads. For additional information contact the Pintler Ranger District in Philipsburg at (406) 859-3211, or the Deer Lodge information center at (406) 846-1770.
