LIGHTNING STRIKE

The DVFD was called to Medicine Lodge for a lightning strike fire Wednesday afternoon. It had burned about 50 acres at this report time of 7:00 pm. Grant Volunteer Fire Dept., DNRC and Dillon Volunteer Fire Department are on scene at press time.

BIG HOLE BATTLEFIELD SPEAKER

The Big Hole National Battlefield welcomes Bessie Black-eagle as its weekend summer speaker on Aug. 3-4.

Her presentation will focus on the history of the Nez Perce language. The Nez Perce language, similar to the Sahaptin language spoken by a number of Northwest tribes, is exceedingly difficult to learn and even harder to pronounce. The Nez Perce language, currently spoken fluently only by a handful of elders was disappearing. Recent programs which teach Nez Perce to pre-school, elementary and high school students, as well as college level courses, now insure the language will not be lost.

Bring you families and join in a fun and informative demonstration. Admission is free.

Scheduled presentations will take place at the Big Hole Battlefield Visitor Center: Saturday, Aug 3, and Sunday, Aug. 4, at noon and 3 p.m.

Immigration advocacy grinds on despite poverty and unemployment

By Joe Guzzardi

Cagle Cartoons

Paul Ryan, U. S. Representative, Chairman of the House Budget Committee and former vice-presidential candidate recently declared that the federal war on poverty "has failed miserably." No one argues. During the fifty years since President Lyndon Johnson first promised to end poverty, the United States has wasted $15 trillion; 46 million Americans live in poverty and 15 million more receive food stamps than before the 2007 recession started.

The complete story is worse than Ryan indicated. For every job that the White House claims to have created, two Americans have been added to the food stamp roles. Over the weekend, the Associated Press reported that four out of five U.S. adults have struggled with joblessness, near-poverty or welfare reliance for at least parts of their lives, a sure sign that the economy is deteriorating and the American dream more elusive than ever.

Despite the obvious truth that the last thing the nation needs when so many Americans are suffering is more people, especially more poor people like those who would be invited through the ill-conceived Senate immigration bill, S. 744, advocacy for the legislation grinds on.

Poorly written immigration bills like S. 744 translate into importing poverty. Historically, immigration legislation admitted only the foreign-born who would be self-sufficient. Those who entered but became welfare dependent were subject to deportation under the policy then known as the public charge doctrine.

Today, because of political correctness, the public charge doctrine has disappeared. Whether they are legal or illegal immigrants, the poor, under-educated and unskilled are welcome, even though jobs are few and budgets to fund more services depleted.

The current and future beneficiaries of lax immigration enforcement are Hispanics which the Census Bureau has identified as the group with the nation's highest poverty rate. On average, 23.2 percent of Hispanics live below the poverty line compared to the national average of 14.3 percent.

Ryan, a self-proclaimed budget-busting Republican has curiously assumed Senator Marco Rubio's role as the GOP's most vocal proponent of granting amnesty to 11 million illegal immigrants and importing millions more overseas workers. In private meetings with Senate and House members, Ryan has been trying to map out a strategy to pass amnesty legislation before the year's end.

According to Ryan, passing a generous immigration reform bill is "the right thing to do." But amnesty is the wrong thing, especially for millions of impoverished immigrant-headed households and the 20 million jobless or under-employed Americans. Part-time job creation now exceeds the numbers of full-time jobs added each month. Even Ryan, a supposed budget guru, can't deny the math. Every authorized worker added to the labor market makes it tougher for unemployed Americans to find work.

Ryan is rumored to be considering a 2016 White House bid. Like Rubio earlier this year, Ryan may think that if he takes a leadership role in passing an immigration bill, his chances will improve. But immigration advocacy ended poorly for Rubio. In January, a Public Policy Polling report ranked Rubio number one among potential Republican presidential candidates. Today, after assuming a prominent role as the Gang of Eight's most visible immigration advocate and promoting S. 744 for months, Rubio ranks sixth.

Veteran Capitol Hill observers know that immigration is Congress' most toxic issue. Wise politicians listen to their constituents who strongly oppose to rewarding illegal immigration with legalization and importing millions of overseas workers to compete with struggling Americans.

How to Get Through Your Hardest Time of Day

When are you most likely to overeat?

Use these tips to avoid temptation, no matter when it strikes.

Some people find prime-time television hours the hardest on their weight-loss plan; others say midnight's the worst. Still others fall off-track mid-afternoon. And for a smaller group, right after breakfast is the most difficult time to stay away from snacks.

In a recent poll, we asked WeightWatchers.com users what the hardest time of day was for them to stick to their diet plan. Two percent said morning, 32 percent said mid-afternoon, 46 percent said evening, and 18 percent said late at night. Which time zone do you fall in?

Whichever your "weak" time is, we can help. We asked Kimberly Glenn, MS, RD, LD, of Northside Hospital's weight-reduction clinic in Atlanta, Georgia, for some time-tested advice.

MORNING MUNCHIES

Glenn says: First things first, start out with a healthy breakfast; you can do it on the run. Make sure you include protein and fiber — without them, you'll get hungry quicker. Try:

High-fiber cereal, milk and fruit.

Packets of oatmeal, made with milk.

If you eat breakfast at 7 a.m. and feel hungry again at 10, don't be distressed. If you're on a good schedule, you should feel hungry every three or four hours. Have a healthy snack, maybe a piece of fruit, just to tide you over. And if it's going to be a long time until your next meal, include protein in your snack — maybe eat a Luna or other protein bar.

AFTERNOON APPETITE

Glenn says: Most people have a hard time at this time of day. A lot of people eat lunch between 11 and 1 and dinner at 6, so a snack in between makes sense. Try:

Yogurt and cereal

Cottage cheese and fruit

Avoid sugary, empty-calorie foods. If you eat things like that, you'll still be hungry and you may overeat later. An afternoon snack should give you energy and keep you full until dinner.

EVENING GRAZING

Glenn says: Where are you eating when you eat at this time? Do you have a favorite chair that you eat and watch TV in? When you're in a "comfort" place like that, you're likely to lose track of the quantity you take in. The first step is to try to not eat in your "happy place," but if you really want to, have a set snack — don't graze.

Try to stick with snacks that have built-in portion control. Last but not least, enjoy your snack: There's nothing wrong with having one, just so long as you don't go overboard.

MIDNIGHT NIBBLING

What Glenn says: You need to ask yourself, am I really hungry or am I just bored? Am I eating because of stress or an emotional issue? Close the kitchen — make it off-limits until the morning — or limit yourself to sugar-free hot chocolate or hot tea. Have a snack planned for a certain time: Limit yourself to that one snack and see if it satisfies you. (And if you're having a serious problem with insomnia, you might want to discuss it with your doctor.)

TURN AROUND YOUR MISTAKES

Have you ever been told to learn from your mistake? What are you to learn? How to do it right. How to be patient. How to make it someone else's fault. Do you lose sleep and let it haunt you for days? Maybe the best thing to do is be calm, be curious and learn why you made the mistake. Many times it is just not knowing the right questions to ask to do the job right. Or perhaps, afraid to ask enough questions because you want someone to think you know what you are doing. By not asking, you may prove you didn't know all that much.

I know I would prefer someone ask me what I want instead of reading my mind. Many times my mind is so muddled from other things I should have done that day to remember all the details. Then we both have it wrong, because I forgot to say and they forgot to ask. Communication maybe the key here.

Can you forget about failure? Many times forgetting may make you repeat the mistake. It may be best if you remember, but don't dwell on it. You can keep going ahead each day with the intention that you will eventually be successful and get it right.

Maybe we are all just meant to have failures so that we can be more understanding to those we think are wrong. Think how you react when someone makes your food wrong, or counts your change back incorrectly. Those are just little things that sometimes are reacted to in a big way. It really is only important at that moment in time to you - in the big picture of life, no harm was really done and you will survive. Before you act or react, think of what is really important and don't make a bigger mistake that you can't turn around and learn from in a positive way.
