Chilling News

PETER FUNT

All I know about climate, some say, is what's outside my window.

Across much of California this is one of the coolest summers in memory, with temperatures well below normal. Here in San Jose, where the average high in August is 82 degrees, so far this month it's at 75 — with no warming predicted anytime soon.

Yet, on a recent day when San Jose's high was 73 and its low 60, California's Environmental Protection Agency released an extensive report about climate change and global warming. The news was chilling, regardless of what the thermometer happened to say.

The report confirms that climate change throughout the state is resulting in reduced snowmelt runoff, rising sea levels, increasing wildfires and unnatural migration of animals to higher elevations.

The report paints what its summary calls "a disturbing picture" of how the state is being affected. "It's long past time for action," said Gov. Jerry Brown.

California leads the nation in many areas — both in the size of its problems and in efforts to address them — and it has already done more than any other state to limit greenhouse gases and increase the use of renewable energy.

Nationally, progress has been slow. Congress remains entwined financially and emotionally with powerful forces in the oil industry. President Obama has spoken out but come up short, according to many environmentalists.

Polls show most Americans favor a meaningful response to climate change; in California they represent nearly 80 percent of adults. However, there is a lingering fear that some environmental reforms will take away jobs, and the economy remains, understandably, uppermost in most people's thinking.

But no matter what's outside the window on any given day, the scientific evidence about climate change is overwhelming. In another study released this month, researchers at Stanford University concluded that from 1980 to 2005 the earth's temperature rose at a rate 10 times faster than during any period since the birth of mankind.

Meanwhile, researchers led by a group at UC Berkeley published a lengthy study showing that global warming has behavioral as well as environmental consequences. Increased temperatures prompt more violent crime and even wars, according to the data.

The report projects that in the world's most dangerous regions, such as equatorial Africa, each added degree of average temperature increases the chance of conflict among opposing groups by 11 to 14 percent.

"The world will be a very violent place by mid-century if climate change continues as projected," researcher Thomas Homer-Dixon told the Associated Press.

Not far from here, in Richmond, Calif., more than 1,000 people demonstrated the other day outside a Chevron refinery. Police made 160 arrests among those protesting practices of the fossil fuel industry. Such demonstrations are growing in frequency and intensity nationwide.

Yet, for many of us it's still a puzzle. We may read that the water level under San Francisco's Golden Gate Bridge has risen eight inches since 1855, but is that really the type of news that prompts the average citizen to modify his behavior?

Usually a plea from politicians that we "leave a better future for our children and grandchildren" is met with nods of approval followed by a chorus of yawns. Perhaps California can take the lead in changing that when it comes to the very real problems of climate change.

It won't be easy. Not when the thermometer outside has readings in the 60s, and the very day in mid-summer that the state issues its findings on global warming.

San Jose's local paper carries the front-page headline, "Bundle up: Parkas are in order."

Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks NEWS

CORRECTION: UPPER BIG HOLE CLOSED - HEADWATERS TO MOUTH OF THE NORTH FORK

Low stream flows and continued high water temperatures and have prompted Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks officials to close the Upper Big Hole River from the headwaters (South of Jackson) to the mouth of the North Fork Big Hole (approximately 14 miles downstream from the Wisdom Bridge) to all fishing effective immediately until conditions improve.

Flows on the Upper Big Hole in the area noted above have dropped below 20 cubic feet per second (cfs)—the full angling closure threshold in the Big Hole Drought Management Plan. This closure will remain in effect until September 15th or when flows improve to at least 40 cfs for seven consecutive days with water temperatures less than 70 degrees for three consecutive days as well.

FWP biologists will continue to monitor all southwest Montana rivers to ensure the health of local fish populations. FWP appreciates the patience of the angling community.

For details on all emergency angling restrictions and other drought updates, go to the FWP home page at fwp.mt.gov and select Drought & Fire under the Hot Topics heading, or check the FWP online fishing guide.

Life Can Be?

By: MJ

No day is like any other day. Isn't that interesting? You never know what the next day will bring, and that's exciting. Alpha English

Bringing joy to your life through perspective is something we all can do. Are you a person that craves routine and wants every day like any other day? If you are then you may be putting your life on auto-pilot and you are no longer looking at the world around you. Routines can become boring, dull; causing us to lose emotional sensitivity and closing many doors that might be eliminating progress that would enhance our life style.

Many of us were taught as children to be pilot, believe & trust people, be honest, loyal and many more great values. Yes, we do need all those qualities and many more. Common in today's world is "Phony Politeness"-- a fungus that politely preys on others, is alive and well. Life is a game and we are competing at all times. You compete for a partner, husband, wife, jobs, positions, acceptance, recognition, friends, success...

Look at and beware of the world you live in and let yourself experience your new day with a happy heart. The journey your life goes in is up to you and you can cultivate an eager, pleasant life style through your perception of the picture your eyes show you.

MONTANA WESTERN ART GALLERY CALLS FOR ENTRIES FOR EMERICK EXHIBIT

The University of Montana Western Art Gallery is seeking entries to be included in the Mary Baker Emerick Art Salon Exhibition Sept. 27 through Nov. 13, 2013.

The exhibit will celebrate the outstanding contribution that the long-time Montana Western art professor has made to the university and community, UMW Foundation Director Roxanne Engellant said. "Mary Baker Emerick not only provided inspiration to her students for over 43 years, but has left a lasting legacy in the form of a trust that continues to provide scholarships and opportunities for art students."

Gallery director Glen Bodish said that all Beaverhead County artists are eligible to exhibit work. Entries must first be submitted via e-mail by Sept. 6, 2013 to be considered. Additional information and details on the submission process are available by calling Bodish at 406-491-1444 or e-mailing g_bodish@umwestern.edu.

The university also plans to honor Emerick by dedicating a new art studio in her name during Montana Western's Alumni Weekend. The Emerick Art Studio will be dedicated Friday, Sept. 7, 2013 at 4 p.m. The event will include guest speakers, refreshments and a tour of the facility.

Meeting Cancelled

The meeting for Beaverhead Conservation District Board Meeting scheduled for Thursday, August 15th in the USDA main conference room at 7 p.m. has been canceled.
