Ranch Stewardship Fence Project

Rocky Mountain Fencing out of Butte began construction on the Big Hole River Foundation's Moose Creek Ranch Stewardship Fence Project this week. The Big Hole River Foundation's Stewardship Fence Program was established to help landowners construct and maintain wildlife-friendly fencing to manage livestock grazing while protecting critical sections of the Big Hole River and important tributaries.

Moose Creek Ranch straddles Moose Creek less than a mile from its confluence with the river. It enters from the east and is located midway between Divide and Melrose. "Moose Creek is a critical tributary to the Big Hole River for water flow and temperature, and we will be helping the rancher manage grazing along nearly a mile of it," said Big Hole River Foundation Executive Director Michael Bias.

Butte's own George Grant Chapter of Trout Unlimited – namesake of the Big Hole River Foundation's founder – came on board in a big way to help fund the Moose Creek Ranch Stewardship Fence Project. Upon hearing of the George Grant Chapter's commitment, Montana Trout Unlimited matched their funds for a total TU contribution of $5,000. Additional project funds were secured from the US Fish and Wildlife Service's Partners for Wildlife Program and Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks' Future Fisheries Program.

"We are excited to have the George Grant Chapter of Trout Unlimited and Montana TU as partners on the Moose Creek Ranch Stewardship Fence Project," Bias said. "The partnership on this project testifies to the importance of tributaries such as Moose Creek to the conservation of the Big Hole River."

The Big Hole River Foundation's mission is to conserve, enhance, and protect the free-flowing character of the Big Hole River and its unique culture, fish, and wildlife. The Big Hole River basin is one of the West's last watersheds free of major development. One of the last self-sustaining wild populations of fluvial Arctic grayling in the lower-48 states, a federal candidate species and Montana Species of Special Concern, occurs in the Big Hole River. By enhancing aquatic and riparian habitats along a one-mile reach of Moose Creek, an important tributary to the Big Hole River, this project will benefit fluvial Arctic grayling; west-slope cutthroat, rainbow, and brown trout; and mountain whitefish as well as other non-game native fishes.

The Big Hole River Foundation is actively seeking potential Big Hole River and important tributary conservation projects. Funding is available for river conservation projects, such as the Stewardship Fence Program. If you are interested in a project or know of someone who has a potential river conservation project, please call Mike Bias at 406-925-2276.

"FIRING" 12 Danger Zones Employment Law Series

Firing an employee can be a frightening, even devastating event for a supervisor. Job loss, even for a good reason, is emotional and damaging on many fronts. Most supervisor training is geared solely toward preventing the need for firing an employee, but supervisors also need training on how to fire someone in the most legally sound way possible. Dillon Job Service brings "Firing" the last in our 12 Danger Zones Employment Law series on Thursday, 12 noon, Stockman Bank. All employers, supervisors, managers and HR personnel are invited to attend free of charge.

Festival of Trees

The Festival of Trees is approaching quickly. The Resource Center would like to remind you to be thinking about what you are able to contribute to this special event. The recipients of the festival this year are the Women's Resource/Community Support Center and the Elk's Club. Mark your calendars for November 22nd Family Night, and/or November 23rd Adult Night. Silent auction items, live auction items, homemade candy & appetizers are all welcomed and needed. We are excited to see you there. If you would like to visit with Kelly please call her at 683-6106.
