VIGILANTE AUTHOR COMING TO DILLON

Carol Buchanan, author of three historical novels about the Vigilantes of Montana, will sign books and talk with readers at The Bookstore, 26 N. Idaho, in Dillon, MT, from 4 – 6 PM on Friday, June 20, 2014.

Buchanan, descended from Montana pioneers and homesteaders, says the Vigilantes of Montana were "a group of men who risked everything – their lives and futures, and perhaps the very souls – to break a conspiracy of robbery and murder in Bannack and Alder Gulch."

The Bannack-Alder Gulch region had more gold than most people could conceive of lying ready to hand for those who didn't mind a lot of back-breaking work.

However, there were whose who wanted the gold but scorned the labor. Soon, ruffians ruled and murder was tolerated.

For honest people, despite the election of Henry Plummer as sheriff of the Grasshopper Mining District, there was no adequate law enforcement and no code of law to enforce anyway.

This forced the Vigilantes to act.

The author, a Spur award winner and a student of Montana history has turned her pen to historical novels producing excellent stories of a bygone era.

Pilot apparently alone in Lost Trail crash; witness describes fireball

By David Erickson and Rob Chaney The Missoulian

Investigators have tentatively identified the aircraft and the pilot who perished in the crash at Lost Trail Ski Area on Tuesday evening, authorities said Wednesday.

The pilot is believed to have been the only occupant of the twin-engine aircraft.

However, Ravalli County Undersheriff Steve Holton, who is also the county's chief deputy coroner, did not identify the aircraft and said that the pilot's name is being withheld pending notification of the family.

Holton said that the aircraft burned badly after it crashed just north of the ski lodge at 5:30 p.m. on Tuesday, and that the only thing recognizable was the wing tips.

Holton said that two people witnessed the crash, and that nobody left after it hit the ground. One witness told authorities the airplane appeared to be spinning in the air before it came down flat in the parking lot.

The Federal Aviation Administration is investigating the crash. Investigators arrived at the scene at noon Wednesday.

Seattle tourists Rick McGee and Julie Gomez had just reached the intersection of Highways 43 and 93 at Lost Trail Pass when the plane crashed.

"It had started to snow very hard when we saw the rest area," McGee said. "We pulled in at the rest area and the lady at the info center was coming out. We could hear the plane, and she was pointing and circling her arm – she said, 'It's spinning, it's spinning!' "

McGee and Gomez didn't see the plane fall, but they did see the fireball as it exploded on impact behind the information building. There were several smaller explosions and pops after the initial blast.

"I've seen planes crash before, but I've never seen a plane go up so fast – so quick," Gomez said. "It was continuous flames for four or five minutes."

After learning that law enforcement and fire crews were on the way, McGee and Gomez resumed their road trip toward Missoula. They said the weather had been switching from rain to heavy snow to blue sky most of the day.

"I hope it was just a pilot inside," McGee said. "With a twin-engine plane like that, there could have been four or six people. Nobody could have survived that crash."

Letter to the Editor

Sen. Walsh's remarks as prepared for delivery:
Thank you Mr. President,

I rise today not only as a Senator from Montana, but as a veteran of the long and difficult war in Iraq.

Like most Americans, the increasing instability in Iraq, and the disintegration of the country along sectarian boundaries, has me deeply concerned.

The heinous advance of the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria, and their systematic execution of Iraqi soldiers and the murder of innocent civilians gives pause to people everywhere.

I stand here today as a veteran and as a father whose son has deployed multiple times. We fought in the war that Washington began based on false information, a war that ended and from which we must move on.

I led an infantry battalion of more than 700 of Montana's finest into combat. Our area of operation was just north of Tikrit - from Baiji to Kirkuk, the very same area being fought over today.

It was late 2004 and the country had fallen into a bitter sectarian conflict. A conflict that unfolded after the dismantling of the Ba'athist led Army and fueled by ancient divides between the Shia's and the Sunnis. Those same disputes are again boiling over in Iraq today.

From the end of 2004 to late 2005, my unit fought to hold ground, secure roads and build infrastructure. We worked with local Sheiks and key leaders to forge a path to peace. We helped return Iraq's government to its people.

While there, we oversaw two successful elections, and watched with hope and great satisfaction as the Iraqis ratified their constitution.

It was during this time that I also dispatched a team from my battalion to focus solely on training and assisting members of the newly formed Iraqi Army.

During our unit's entire deployment in Iraq while fighting the insurgency, we faced rocket attacks, snipers, and IED attacks almost daily.

Four of my men were killed in action. There isn't a day that goes by when I don't think of those men and their families.

SFS Robbie McNary from Lewistown, MT, killed on March 31st, 2005.
SSG Kevin Davis of Lebanon, OR, killed on April 8th, 2005.

SSG Timothy Kiser from Theama, CA, killed on April 28th, 2005.

And SGT Travis Arndt from Bozeman, MT, killed on September 21st, 2005.

Scores of others were injured.

And one of my soldiers died by suicide six months after returning home to Montana, a victim of the invisible wounds of war.

Nearly 4,500 Americans were killed in Iraq. Among them, 28 Montana heroes. Some 32,000 Americans were wounded.

The war cost us more than two trillion dollars, most of which Congress put on a credit card, and have left for our grandchildren to pay.

Because this nation failed to prepare for new veterans returning home, we now have a crisis of care within our VA system. A system that is overwhelmed after more than a decade of war.

Today we are seeing 22 veterans die by suicide each day.

These are the true costs of war.

Montanans understand this.

Americans understand this.

And because I work for Montanans, and I'm listening to them. I call on President Obama to use extreme caution when considering options to deal with the sectarian violence we are seeing take place in Iraq today.

America cannot afford another Iraq. Financially or the human cost. We did our job there.

Some are suggesting we make an open ended commitment to Iraq to keep American troops on the ground indefinitely. Sending thousands of America's young men and women back to Iraq to step into the middle of a civil war is not the solution.

To my fellow members of Congress, I urge temperance as we navigate this difficult terrain.

Because I know that the foreign policy failures made in Washington fall disproportionately on the backs of young men and women from small towns across Montana and America.

I've seen war up close. And like too many American families, I've seen the costs of war up close. On families. On communities.

It is now time for the Iraqis to secure and defend their own nation. The embrace of their own self-determination is the only path to a true and everlasting peace in Iraq.

Thank you. John E. Walsh

What Would Happen if Congress Adopted the 'Spending Rule of Three'?

There are days I must admit that I am just old-fashioned, so here goes my admission: I still do my financial records on paper. One little book for income, the same size book for expenses—it just fills up faster. As I am writing in the column titles necessary for keeping track of this year's expenditures, the Spending Rule of Three comes to mind:

1. How necessary is this?
2. Do I need it now?
3. Is it a one time expenditure or a continual expense?

Asking those questions and answering honestly would probably result in less book work for me, and no doubt, I would be just as satisfied with life.

If true for me, then these are questions that I would expect a school board, county supervisors and every governmental official to ask on any item that is in the budget.

I wonder what would happen if congress would sincerely debate any bill presented to them on those terms. It would have to be done with a statesman mentality—what is best for the country. Think Constitution. It's has been a long time since that the Spending Rule of Three question has been asked by anyone. Lobbyists, with their pockets full of bribes and endless money do a pretty good job of spending your money and mine on appropriations, grants and subsidies that quickly fill the expense book.

Much as I find railroad history fascinating, it is disturbing how the railroads courted governmental officials. There are plenty of scandals in our history books to study, even a bill that guaranteed the railroads a six percent profit over "honest" expenses. No questions asked, even if supplies came from crony business partners.

Some say the railroads got what was coming to them when America's love with the automobile and the creation of the interstate road system changed the transportation industry.

Subsidies and tax breaks have become imbedded into our thinking. Subtly, they take away our independence; in order to get the money we have to make concessions. Eventually, that money is considered a source of continual income.

Proof of that comes when we realize after a century of tax breaks and subsidies, the petroleum industry and many other entities still receive them. It appears that it's awfully hard to be weaned from this 'free' money.

Absurdly as it sounds, the sweet deals they 'tweak' out aren't totally free—money spent for lobbyists salaries and payoffs tend to equal the money received. Things seem to be a bit upside down when companies have as many lawyers on staff as those who are the productive employees actually working. Agriculture has become part of the mix. We want the subsidies for our products, yet demand they end for competitive businesses. We may start to think we deserve it, we work hard or others have more than us, and the government ought to equalize things.

If that were so, really tall people might have a legitimate claim. It's not fair they have to pay extra for clothing. They could demand laws against clothing manufacturers for charging more. Perhaps even a tax rebate.

Most any campaigning politician will tell you what they think you want to hear: "Of course! You deserve it," promising that once elected he/she will make your wishes their first priority. Those same exact words will be repeated at the next political stop for a different cause.

Farmers or anyone else, and that means everybody, are not entitled to any more consideration than anybody else. On the other hand, they are not entitled to less. Simply put, we should not ask Congress for anything we wouldn't want to see given to anyone else.
