Annual Rainbow Gathering To Be Held On Uinta-Wasatch-Cache National Forest

The Rainbow Family of Living Light have chosen to hold their 2014 Annual Rainbow Gathering on the Uinta-Wasatch-Cache National Forest, Heber-Kamas Ranger District. The gathering site is located approximately 15 mile east of Heber City in the West Fork of the Duchesne area. Participants come from all walks of life drawing anywhere from 10,000-20,000 people. Participants will continue to arrive for a couple of weeks with the peak population during week of July 4.

The Rainbow Family is a self-described loose knit group of people without leadership or organization who participate in a national gathering once a year. They come from all across the country. Since 1972, the event has taken place on a different national forest annually during a two-week period surrounding the Fourth of July holiday and has grown in size, attracting up to 20,000+ people.

Any event of this size can have significant impacts on traffic, communities, local resources, residents and visitors. Local businesses can expect to see large numbers of Rainbow Family participants visiting stores, buying food and supplies along routes to the gathering site. Areas are expected to be very congested during that time.

The gathering will take place under the conditions and guidelines provided under a Forest Service Operating Plan and collaborated with Rainbow Family members. The Operating Plan will address public health and safety concerns, minimize impacts to natural resources, and outline post-event rehabilitation procedures.

Because of the magnitude of this event, the Forest Service utilizes an agency National Incident Management Team (NIMT) in coordination with local Forest Service personnel to manage the impacts of this event. The Forest Service

NIMT has arrived on the Uinta-Wasatch-Cache National Forest and is working with various local agencies to provide first and foremost for employee and public health and safety, followed by managing and minimizing adverse impacts to natural resources.

According to David Whittekiend, supervisor for the Uinta-Wasatch-Cache National Forest, the Rainbow Family first announced this year's gathering location on their website. He has since worked with the group to develop an operating plan to protect forest resource.

The plan is meant to protect local streams, wetlands and sensitive wildlife habits that could be impacted by the gathering. Once the gathering ends, some Rainbow Family members will stay behind to pick up garbage, clean and bury fire pits and help restore the area.

"Our experience is that they've done a good job of rehabbing those areas once they're done," Whittekiend said.

The last Rainbow gathering in Utah was held in 2003, on the north slope of the Uinta Mountains. That gathering drew 9,800 people, and according to Whittekiend, the gatherers left the site in good condition.

"In the end, it was a relatively positive experience," he said.

Still, the gatherings aren't without their costs to the forest service. Last year's gathering in southwestern Montana cost the federal agency about $575,000 in law enforcement and administrative expenses. According to Kathy Jo Pollock, public information officer with Uinta-Wasatch-Cache National Forest, this year's gathering is expected to run the same, in the range of $500,000.

Recent snowfall and cold weather is expected to have slowed the gathering so far, but Whittekiend expects the gathering to begin picking up over the weekend. He said his agency will work to keep the public informed about any impacts to resources and local communities for the duration of the gathering.

Did you know?

By: MJ

Research has illustrated how ideological and partisan loyalties can both reflect and reshape Americans everyday lives.

A research on political polarization finds that conservatives would rather live in large houses with large spaces between houses, in small towns and rural areas -- ideally among people of the same religious faith.

Liberals opt for smaller houses in denser communities, amenities within walking distant and in cities preferably with different races and ethnicities. It was found that liberals like to be near art museums and theaters.

Six Facts You Should Know About Unaccompanied Minors

By Joe Guzzardi

Here are six facts you need to know about what President Obama fraudulently calls the unaccompanied minors "urgent humanitarian crisis."

First, many minors aren't unaccompanied. Rather, they're traveling with their mothers, some pregnant with future anchor baby citizens. Other women crossing are of child bearing age—this bodes poorly for Americans who favor limiting population growth. As a whole, the arriving aliens have little education, few jobs skills, and don't speak English. Many will be dependent on social services throughout their lives.

Second, despite what the Obama administration tells you, the illegal immigrants aren't fleeing Central American violence. The aliens have advised immigration officials that they intend to reunite with their families, a high percentage of which are also illegal immigrants and who have told their Central American relatives that once inside the United States, Obama will allow them to remain. Before releasing the aliens, officials issue them an immigration court appearance date. Since few show up, the orders are jokingly refer to as "run letters."

Third, some of those released have contagious diseases. An HHS source, working with the south Texas Border Patrol, reported that many of the youths have pink eye, scabies and tuberculosis but are nevertheless medically cleared and released because of overloaded housing facilities.

Fourth, although there's talk among some influential Washington D.C. politicians like Hillary Clinton that the aliens should be returned home, Obama and Department of Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson don't echo her sentiment. Quite the opposite, the Department of Justice created a $2 million fund to provide legal representation to the minors. The goal is to help the aliens achieve legal permanent resident status which will eventually lead to citizenship.

Fifth, the alien totals are huge and growing. According to the Border Patrol, unaccompanied children apprehensions increased from 16,067 in fiscal year (FY) 2011 to 24,481 in FY 2012 and 38,833 in FY 2013.

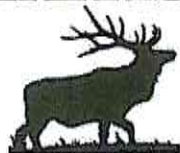

During the first eight months of FY 2014, the Border Patrol processed 47,017 children. If the influx continues apace, and it shows no signs of slowing, DHS predicts that by fiscal year-end September 30, annual totals could exceed 90,000.
