Reply to Article Wrote

By: MJ

Last week Ms. Westad wrote an article making accusations against a person that writes articles published in Dillonite and the owner (Brenda). The article stated that what was wrote and printed was misinformation or lies. It was difficult to know what Ms. Westad was calling misinformation as she gave no facts.

If at any time you have questions about any of the articles printed don't hesitate to call 683-4903, texted 660-6427, send an e-mail or stop by the Printing Place on Montana Street. You can read the Tribune for more detailed information and go on line to [\[todayindillon.com\]](http://todayindillon.com) and watch a real time video of council and some committee meetings. Gather the actual facts by watching video.

I believe I am one of many in the community that is appreciative and grateful for Brenda's time, devotion and commitment that is needed to publish and deliver around town the Dillonite five (5) days a week. Let's not forget to thank Lee Jones and the rest of the staff that it takes to put the Dillonite in your hands each week day. The paper offers a great service to many by announcing deaths within a day or two, allows for many to advertise products or services daily, notices of meetings...

As for me I have no reason to write articles that are half truths or false. I do attend committee meetings as well as council meetings and do my best to print the actual happenings at the meetings.

The negative comments Ms Westad refers to in her article made by people in the audience were: question about a statement that was paid and only the council (the only people that can authorize spending tax dollars) could properly answer along with a complimentarily comment about how Mayor Klakken explained to the finance committee the method he used to negotiate the city employee and police contracts with union on behalf of city.

Ms. Westad sent her article to the Dillonite and it was printed. Thank Brenda for playing fair across the board.

Editors Note:

I would like to thank Lynn Westad for the articles she sends on the city happenings. I would also like to thank Marg (MJ) for the reports she sends in. I am not always able to attend the meetings myself. The General asked Marg if she would keep people informed about the events in the city and county meetings when he was no longer able and I know the time and commitment it take - so thank you.

Now to comment just briefly on Ms Westad's comments about the reports in the Dillonite be inaccurate or completely wrong - all of it completely wrong - I have trouble believing that Lynn. I do watch the recordings on the today in dillon site sometimes when I can attend and I don't believe that statement to be true or fair. If it is completely wrong, give me a fact and we can correct the mistake.

I have attended meetings and asked questions - the answer I got was that I was not allowed to ask questions - it is a comment time - NOT question time. Comments seem to be like opinions - we all have them and thankfully they are not all the same. That would be a very dull and boring life. However, it seems that at the city meetings if you make a comment then you are a negative individual according to Ms Westad. The other point that seems to come up is where the people that comment live. I have never seen anything in the charter or anywhere on the agenda that states comments from people in the city limits only. If that is in the rules somewhere please correct me. I will try to ask the city attorney about that.

When Joe and I started the Dillonite we had a purpose to inform people in town when someone had passed away faster than a weekly paper could do. We had a few advertisers to pay so we could do it and not charge and do it 5 days a week.

I am thankful that it has been so helpful to many people, organizations and businesses to get the word out when there is something taking place. My goal is to just keep the public informed. I won't put anything in that I feel is completely wrong.

You may or may not agree with the wolf trapping class that was in the paper Friday - but it is information. It doesn't have to be my cup of tea, I don't have to agree or disagree, I just try to help get the information to the public.

I don't want to force my feelings on anyone. I don't want anyone to force their feelings on me. Sort of like - I have my religion you have yours (whatever that may be) believe as you choose. Well the page is full so I guess I should stop and sorry (sometimes I am not brief with my comments). I can only say I'm sorry Lynn if you think that this paper is completely wrong just don't pick it up and read it, because I certainly wouldn't force it on anyone. Brenda Womack

A Special note to Chuck Dishno and Steve Jenkins from LaVon D. Brillhart.

Mr. Chuck Dishno and Steve Jenkins you were both right that I made a mistake about the price of gas during the Presidency of George W. Bush. I am sorry for my mistake. I looked at figures that gave a cost what the price of gas should have been because of inflation and not a true cost.

I will try to be accurate in the future. Sorry, just don't tell my Mother I made a mistake.
 Best wishes.

Hillary's Puzzling Demo Gap

By Peter Funt

The headline on a new poll about Hillary Clinton's presumed presidential bid is that fallout over Benghazi hasn't hurt her chances. The data show 67 percent of all voters believe she is a "strong leader" and 60 percent find her to be "trustworthy."

With the release of her book, "Hard Choices," this week, in which she addresses Benghazi and other challenges during her time as secretary of state, Clinton is oiling the machinery for a run. The ABC News and Washington Post poll results seem to fit perfectly: despite Benghazi and relentless attacks by Republicans, her numbers remain just about where they were when she entered the 2008 race as the overwhelming favorite among Democrats.

But deep inside the poll -- so far down that the Post didn't even mention them in its story -- are some details that the Clinton team might find troubling. It seems that as people become older, wealthier and more educated they are somewhat less likely to support Mrs. Clinton.

Put another way: Clinton is weakest among people who are most like her. Take, for example, the question of whether Clinton "has new ideas for the country's future." Among adults 18-39, an impressive 61 percent believe she does. But when those over 40 respond, the positive responses plunge to 49 percent. Within her own age group of people over 65, only 48 percent believe she has new ideas.

Among those who, like her, have a college degree, only 47 percent believe she has new ideas. However, among people with no degree, it's 56 percent.

An even more puzzling result involves the statement, "She understands the problems of people like you." Among people under 40, there was a 59 percent positive response. But affirmative answers among those over 40 yielded only 51 percent.

A remarkable 75 percent of people under 40 believe Clinton is "a strong leader." Yet, among Clinton's own age group the number slips by 14 percentage points. If she runs and wins, Hillary Clinton would be 70 when she takes the oath of the office.

The question regarding leadership provides similarly surprising data among those who, like Clinton, are more affluent. Those earning less than $50,000 a year, affirm her leadership by 73 percent; those with higher incomes by only 63 percent.

The Post-ABC poll does not cross-reference demographic factors, such as age, education and wealth, with party affiliation. It could be that older, wealthier Republicans account in part for the gap in Mrs. Clinton's numbers. However, in 2012, President Obama beat John McCain handily among the most educated voters as well as the most affluent. McCain's greatest strength was among middle-age males.

In her book Clinton insists she remains undecided about running. If she does seek the presidency, she'll have to work harder than might have been expected to gain support among her peers. Why are those who've known her longest and share some of her demographic traits, beyond gender, the most skeptical?

Answers may be provided in the coming days as Mrs. Clinton makes as big a media splash as modern book-promotion can provide. She'll be taking questions from all corners and on virtually all networks about "Hard Choices."

She writes, "Ultimately, what happens in 2016 should be about what kind of future Americans want for themselves and their children -- and grandchildren. I hope we choose inclusive politics and a common purpose to unleash the creativity, potential, and opportunity that makes America exceptional."

So far, those with the longest, toughest road ahead seem most willing to buy in.
