"Boots Country" Karaoke at Mac's Last Cast

"Boots Country" Karaoke will be at Mac's Last Cast this Saturday, July 26th, from 9:00 P.M. until 1:00 A.M.

Boots has had a special request from Darrell Cowen, who is a professor of Geology from Washington State University in Seattle, to have karaoke for his Geology students that are here at Western for a Summer Class.

Darrell has been bringing his students to Western for many years and has even returned from Seattle to enter in Boots' Labor Day Karaoke Contest.

Everyone is welcome and this is a good time to pick a song and practice for the Labor Day Contest.

Letter to the Editor

LOOTING OF BODIES FROM THE DOWNED AIRLINER

We see so many horrible pictures on the news of the downed airliner in eastern Ukrain. I thought it was amazing how all the passports landed in one place. They had to have been taken from the bodies, while the eastern Ukrainian rebels were looting them. It is hard to imagine that they could have been blown out of everybody's pockets during the explosion either. How disgusting can these animals get.

I saw somewhat similar criminal activity in various places of eastern Europe right after the Berlin Wall fell, but nothing like this. I don't understand how people can stoop to this level; but, I also remember that we often saw refugees from eastern Europe in Norway throughout the 80's and 90's.

Uffda!!!!

The Lost Sounds of Summer

By Tom Purcell

I long for the sounds of summer I knew as a kid.

In the '60s and '70s, you see, most of our neighbors kept their windows open day and night, allowing the outside sounds to come in and the inside sounds to go out.

I woke every morning to the birds chirping outside my window screen, a dewy chill in the air. I'd smell my father's pipe, which he smoked while he read the paper downstairs. I'd go down to greet him. Sometimes he'd make scrambled eggs and toast covered with butter, and we'd eat while the birds kept on singing.

The evening sounds were equally powerful: a dog barking; a motorcycle downshifting on some faraway hill; people out on their porches listening to the Pirates play on the radio; a baby crying; a couple talking; children laughing; a window fan humming.

Sounds carry far in the summer air. One family on the hill — they had three adult kids still living at home — entertained the whole neighborhood with their cussing and bickering:

"You're an idiot!" one would shout.

"No, you're an idiot!" said another.

"Shut up the both of youse!" the old man would yell. He told our next-door neighbor once he couldn't understand why his kids were so rude to each other, the lousy idiots.

The sounds I miss the most, though, were the shouts and chants and bells that families relied on to call their kids home for supper.

In those days, kids didn't participate in one adult-run activity after another. We didn't sit inside air-conditioned homes playing video games. No, we were out in the hills roaming and exploring and creating all day long.

We collected scrap wood and built shacks. We dammed up the creek and caught minnows and crayfish. One summer, we built a motorized go-cart with some scrap items from a junked riding mower and a couple of two-by-fours. It was one of the great engineering feats in my neighborhood's history.

Occasionally, we'd fib to our mothers and ride our bikes 20 miles farther than we said we would. Or we'd pluck some baby pears off a tree by Horning road and whip them at cars. Every now and then, a car would screech to a stop, and we'd sprint through a creek aqueduct that ran 200 feet beneath the neighborhood.

There was only one major rule a kid had to abide by: you'd better be home in time for supper.

Every kid had a unique sound to call him home. My father went with a deep, booming, "Tom, dinner! Tom, dinner!" I could hear him a mile away or more.

When moms did the calling, they always used full names. They always sang, too, as my Aunt Jane did: "Miiiiiiikkkkeelllll, Keeeeevvvviiiiinnnnnn, suuuuupppppppeeerrrr!"

The Givens boys, up on the hill across the railroad tracks, were called in by a large bell. The clanging sounded off at 6 every night, giving us the sense that a river boat was making its way up the Mississippi or a chow wagon was calling in the cow hands for some grub.

One family used a riot horn. The piercing "hrmmpppphhhhhh!" could be heard for miles. There was no way that kid, attempting to explain why he was late for supper, could claim he didn't hear it.

These mystical summer sounds have been gone a long time now. How wonderful it would be to bring them back.

At least one month every summer, why don't we cease every structured activity for our children, cancel every tournament, and end every adult-run event.

Let's turn off the television and computer. Let's shut down the air conditioner and un-shutter the windows and doors.

Let's allow our kids to go out into the hills to roam and play and discover all day long. That will require us to call them home at dinner.

And our shouts and chants and bells will breathe some much needed music into the sweet summer air.

We Can't Leave These Men Behind

By Jason Stanford

The situation on Texas' southern border is not the only refugee crisis facing the United States. Thousands of Afghan interpreters who need to get out before the Taliban kills them for collaborating with U.S. troops are stuck over there because the State Department has run out of visas. Make no mistake, this is a test of our national character: These men risked their lives to help us bring democracy to Afghanistan, but they might die because our government doesn't work.

About 6,000 interpreters need to come here, and we've only got 3,000 slots left. We can either start digging 3,000 graves in Afghanistan, or we can remember that we're the country that put a dozen men on the moon. We can do big things, and this is just paperwork. This should not be that hard.

As fun as it may be to blame feckless diplomats working for Hillary Clinton and now John Kerry, the number of visas the State Department is allowed to hand out is limited under the Special Immigrant Visa program set to expire in September. That means the only solution lies in the greatest deliberative body in this history of the world, the United States Congress.

Yes, I know. This is the same congress that only gets a 7 percent confidence rating from Americans, which according to Gallup, is the worst rating recorded for any institution. Ever. A 2013 poll found that cockroaches, head lice, colonoscopies, and—ugh—political pundits were more popular than congress, which is on track to pass the fewest non-ceremonial bills. Ever. So yes, at this point I'm willing to engage in a little empty flattery to move this along.

At least—and here is the silver lining on the big honking rain cloud—there is a plan. When congress passes the defense budget, the Afghan visa program will be back up and running, but the visas will run out before then. This is where the plan gets dicey, because Democrats and Republicans will have to work together quickly to get something done.

There are leaders on this issue. Reps. Earl Blumenauer (D-Oregon) and Adam Kinzinger (R-Illinois) are working with Sens. Jeanne Shaheen (D-New Hampshire) and John McCain (R-Arizona) to pass a stopgap bill to provide 1,000 more visas until the defense budget kicks in, but the August recess is coming up, and congress is acting like a bunch of kids aching to be let out on vacation.

It's going to be hard to get congress to focus on this issue. The danger facing the Afghans is real, and the deadline is near, but this problem has never risen to crisis-of-the-week status. No one in congress is going to lose re-election if they let the Taliban hunt the translators down and chop their heads off. But that attitude doesn't make sense to anyone who served in Afghanistan.

"If they were American citizens, we'd spare no expense protecting them and helping them flee to the safety of U.S. soil. But, because they were born Afghan or Iraqi, they're somehow subject to a lower standard of treatment. The truth is, these translators did a lot more than most Americans to protect and defend our country. They have earned their place in America," wrote Army Reserve Capt. Matt Zeller and his former translator Janis Shinwari in a joint oped for CNN.com.

We can help the interpreters once they get here. Zeller and Shinwari, featured recently on HBO's VICE, started No One Left Behind to set up interpreters with furnished apartments, hook up the utilities, and help them find jobs. It's a great organization that could use your help to make good on a promise our country is having a hard time keeping.

But all the money in the world won't make a difference for Zeller and Shinwari if congress doesn't extend the Special Immigrant Visa program. It would be lazy for us assume congress will fail. There's nothing stopping you from calling or emailing your member of congress and demanding they keep America's promise to these interpreters.

These interpreters risked their lives for us. You can afford a few minutes to return the favor. You could do that right now, in fact.

The Market Report

By: Chance Bernall

"What is going on in the real estate market?"

~Second Quarter 2014~

I am often asked in passing, how is the real estate market?

This frequently asked question has led me to prepare a quarterly report that I will publish on our website www.dillonhomes.com as well as our Facebook page and the Dillonite Daily.

The second quarter of 2014 produced 33 sales in Beaverhead County with the following classification breakdown:

Residential-23

Farm/Ranch- 3

Commercial- 3

Land/Subdivision lots- 4

The current residential inventory in Beaverhead County is steady at 95 listings with 18 pending contracts.

*All data contained in this report was derived from the Southwestern Montana MLS.

BROKERS COMMENTS:

The second quarter of 2014 saw an increase in the amount of inventory as sellers typically wait for the spring season to put their homes on the market.

Sales of residential were just off the first quarter with 23 sales that had a median sold price of $160,000. The market did see an increase in commercial sales with 3 sales crossing the finish line in the second quarter.

Demand continues for Farm and Ranch properties with 3 sales in the second quarter.

A strong cattle market has producers looking for expansion opportunities on both irrigated farm-land and summer pasture.

Subdivision and bare land sales are typically up in the second quarter as buyer's who desire new construction purchase prior to the summer construction season. The second quarter saw 4 bare-land sales.

Interest rates remain attractive with the Zillow average for a 30 yr loan at 3.97% as of press time.

"It's tangible, it's solid, it's beautiful, it's artistic, from my standpoint, and I just love real estate." - Donald Trump
