FREELANCER AND FREELOADING

By: Holliday Richardson

My name is Frank, Frank Freelancer. I am a freelance writer. I specialize in human interest stories and present them to publications, hoping to be paid. I recently discovered another profession that is very similar to mine...Freeloading. The comparison is uncanny.

I want to clarify that by freeloader, I refer to people with the ability and skills to be employable and earn a salary, or to earn a living as self-employed but have chosen Freeloading as their occupation. (And let me make this clear. Freeloading is an occupation – it occupies a lot of a person's time. It takes energy and effort that could be spent on other pursuits!!!) People do fall on hard times and need temporary assistance. They are not the ones of whom I speak. Some have fallen into Freeloading and have chosen to keep doing it but Freeloading is a choice. Some Freeloaders are full-timers, other part-timers. That may depend on how good they are at Freeloading and if they can support themselves fully by Freeloading, or if they need to supplement Freeloading with other part time activities.

I find that Freeloading and Freelancing are similar in the following ways:

1. Freelancers tell stories, real, embellished, or fictional, that they sell to other people. So do Freeloaders.
2. Freelancers are paid for their stories. They provide their own food, clothing, utilities, housing, and other goods and services. Freeloaders receive money, food, clothing, utilities, housing, and other goods and services free from people who "buy" their stories.
3. Freelancers have to keep exploring new options and writing new stories. Freeloaders have to keep exploring new options and telling new stories
4. Freelancers appear to enjoy the freedom to work their own schedules but the research, interviews and writing are all very time consuming. Freeloading is a time consuming pursuit, leaving little time for gainful employment.
5. Freelancers usually have to keep changing markets and present material to new audiences. Freeloaders usually have to keep changing locations and presenting their plight to new people and organizations.
6. Freelancers have guidelines, deadlines and other requirements. Freeloaders are bound by guidelines, deadlines and other requirements. When they miss dates, appointments, paperwork or other requirements necessary for freeloading, they often get the goods or services they expect anyway.
7. Freelancers may work at their freelance writing full time. Others have full or part time jobs and freelance on the side. Freeloaders may work at their Freeloading full time. Others Freeload part time and have part time jobs to supplement their income.

There are undoubtedly other similarities in the two professions, but glaring differences are:

1. Freelancers work for themselves and reap the benefits or their labor. Freeloaders work for themselves and reap the benefits of other people's labor.
2. When Freelancers are unsuccessful, they change. When Freeloaders are unsuccessful, blame others. Sometimes that works because the others change.
3. Freelancers work hard to do their best. Freeloaders work hard to convince themselves and others that they are trying hard, nothing is working, and nothing is their fault.
4. Freelancers build themselves and others up. Freeloaders drag others down and step on other people to get what they want.
5. Freelancers manipulate the printed word. Freeloaders manipulate people.
6. Freelancers are proud of what they do for a living. Freeloaders deny that they are Freeloaders. They believe that others are responsible for their problems and responsible for fixing them.
7. Successful Freelancers are rewarded with positive self-esteem. The more successful people are as Freeloaders, the more difficult it is for them to break the cycle of dependency on others and be productive, self-supporting human beings.

This story came to mind when I met Freddy and Faylynn Freeloader. These are not their real names. Since Freeloading is not a particularly noble profession, they would prefer to remain anonymous. This writer respects their wishes and will not reveal their names, identities, or other personal facts that might identify them.

Freddie and Faylynn have tried other means of support with limited success and for limited periods of time, though they have never totally given up Freeloading. For most of their lives, they have chosen to be full time Freeloaders.

Freddie and Faylynn have two little Freeloaders. These little ones have been working as Freeloaders since birth. The children do not know they are Freeloading because they are too little. But just as families that engage their babies and small children as actors to help support the family, the little Freeloaders provide a good deal of the family support. Just like when child actors are not employed, the family income of Freeloaders suffers, often substantially, when the little Freeloaders are not employed.

The problem with Freeloading is that people usually quit buying their bill of goods after a period of time and it is necessary to establish new markets. If Freeloaders have regular customers (churches, government entities, charities, family members), they can continue to be supported for longer periods of time, but generally those customers become sated with Freeloading and quit buying.

Freddie and Faylynn work very hard at Freeloading. Freeloading is Freddie and Faylynn full time job, and they often work overtime. However, Freddie and Faylynn are not doing as well without the children employed. Freddie and Faylynn want to be in charge of their own lives. They want to be free to set their own schedules and their own rules. They want to eat what they want and drink what they want and smoke when and what they want and put whatever they want into their bodies. They desperately want their children to return to Freeloading to provide a better life for the family. One or the other sometimes is employed for a few hours at other pursuits to create income, but the majority of time they engage in Freeloading.

Just like I intend to remain a Freelance writer as long as the profession is good to me and I can support myself, Freddie and Faylynn intend to remain Freeloaders as long as there are people and organizations from whom they can Freeload.

I think Freddie and Faylynn would like a better life. They will never get it Freeloading. Freeloaders manipulate their subsistence, principally using guilt and the kindness and good intentions of others. My Grandmother used to say, "The road to Hell is paved with good intentions." Freddie and Faylynn are mired in some very deep ruts of their own making. It is going to take incredible desire and effort on their part to pull themselves free and steer onto another path. They have no chance at all, however, if they keep receiving assistance that pulls them through the same ruts in the same road sorry road, regardless of how well-intentioned the people who are doing the pulling.

BIGHORN SHEEP RELEASED IN PIONEERS

On Saturday, crews from Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks released nine bighorn ewes into the eastern Pioneer Mountains as part of a herd augmentation effort approved by the Montana Fish and Wildlife Commission in November.

The sheep were captured in the Missouri Breaks north of Winifred and released at the BLM Maiden Rock Fishing Access Site. All of the sheep were fitted with radio collars so that biologists may monitor their movement in the area.

FWP contacted all area landowners to alert them to the augmentation effort.

Train of Life

By MJ

One might associate our lives with a train ride where you will never know at any given time what lies ahead. I have seen and read many different verses about the "Train of Life" during my lifetime and learned something every time I read it.

The story begins with: We board the train and meet our parents, siblings, friends, aunts, uncles, children, partners…

People will continually get on an off, filling our life with love, fun, laughter, sorrow, tears, dreams, hellos, goodbyes, anger, guilt, obstructions… Some folks will board for a period of time just to help us get out of a rut or move forward with our life. They will give support via friendship, love, laughter or just a shoulder to cry on.

Some passengers will only ride a short distance and might get on and off many times, some will stay for a while and some will come and go so quickly you hardly know they were there. Have you ever had someone come into your life and when they leave you wonder why they were there only to find out many years later the few words they spoke to you changed your life?

People that have boarded my train have helped me to move gradually forward through my life. They have helped me accept the fact that the body takes on a stiffness, frequent bathroom trips become a fact, gray hair, wrinkles, other important body parts no longer standing upright (headed south)… The hardest thing for me is calling someone for information only to talk to a machine that tells you 'your phone call is important' but you need to wait in line and food starts tasting the same…

All kidding aside people need people to share the good and bad with. Life is what you make it and life does change every day. Success is having a good relationship with all your passengers and give at all times the best you can give. There will come a day our train ride will end and we ourselves will step off leaving our seat empty. What memories will you leave for those continuing on? You are the sole producer of your "life movie".
