Praying for a White Christmas

By Tom Purcell

The snow started coming down hard a few hours after we'd arrived.

It was Christmas Eve 1976. We were 20 miles from home, visiting my mother's sister at her home in the country.

Earlier that evening, my mother, father, grandmother and sisters had piled into the station wagon to begin our trek.

I was 14 then. My sisters and I were getting older — growing up. Only our youngest sister still believed in Santa Claus.

Teenagers don't much enjoy being stuck in a car together and the annoyance was clear.

My father was in an unpleasant mood. His mother had died on New Year's Day a few years earlier. He'd lost his father when he was only 3.

The merriness of Christmas, which had come so easily when we were tots, was absent.

Fortunately, when we arrived, there was a festive spirit in the air and holiday cookies — that always lifted my spirits.

My mother had three sisters and two brothers. They had 26 children among them. My young cousins filled the house with excitement and joy.

I joined my father and uncles, who talked about football, automobile tires and the weather.

I joined my mother and my aunts, who laughed aloud as they related stories about their children or their father or long-lost relatives.

Then the snow began.

It came on thick and fast and my father, worried, soon urged us to get our things and get in the car.

By the time we got onto the highway, the roads were blanketed and few cars were out. The thick snow deadened the sound of the tires.

It was as though we were in a sleigh gliding silently through the snow-covered countryside.

The snow brought calm over us. Snow always does that.

We humans like to think we have more control over our world than we do. The fact is we have very little control over most things.

The snow makes us remember this. The snow makes us realize how small we really are — how small our worries often are.

My father turned on the radio and tuned in old-time radio broadcasts that one station played every Christmas Eve.

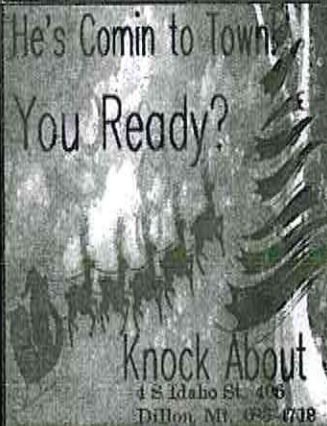

Don Ameche and Frances Langford were performing "The Bickersons," a 1940s show in which a married couple got into hilarious arguments.

I remember one line in which the wife asked if he'd had breakfast and he said he just ate the oatmeal on the stove. "That isn't oatmeal!" she said. "I'm wallpapering."

We laughed heartily at the performance — my father's booming laugh most prominent of all.

I felt the way families must have felt back in the 1940s as they joined together in front of the radio, while performers painted vivid pictures in their imagination.

We enjoyed the old radio shows for a while.

We coaxed our grandmother into telling us stories of what Christmas was like when she was a child.

My mother even got us to sing Christmas carols.

The snow gave us humility. Once humbled, the confinement that had agitated us on the drive to my aunt's house had allowed a serenity we forgot was possible.

That's why I'm praying for a white Christmas this year.

My Comcast Grudge

By Peter Funt

A diverse group including concerned parents, sports fans and even the Writers Guild of America is fighting the proposed merger of media monoliths Time Warner and Comcast. The effort is spearheaded by the non-profit organization Public Knowledge, which claims the $45 billion merger would harm both the economy and our democracy.

I tend to agree, although in a somewhat less hyperbolic way. I'm inclined to judge service industries by the most fundamental element of their existence: service. That's why I'm compelled to share details of my encounter with Comcast the day before Thanksgiving.

8:45 a.m. — Son Danny informs me that Georgetown University's Thanksgiving eve basketball game will be carried on an obscure channel called AXS.

9:10 — I phone Comcast and learn that AXS is only available on the Digital Preferred package which will cost me an extra $10 per month. I grudgingly accept an "instant" upgrade.

11:50 — Still no sign of AXS on our TV. I phone again, fighting through endless menu options and inane music.

12:30 — A supervisor explains that even with Digital Preferred I can't view AXS because I don't subscribe to HD, which is another $10 per month.

12:35 — I grudgingly accept, only to be told that I'll need an HD converter box, which I can pick up at the oxymoronically-named Customer Service Center, about 10 miles away.

1:15 — A clerk hands me the converter while disclosing that I will have pay a $15 "Self Installation Fee." I'm too stressed to ask why.

2:20 — I self-install, and then discover I must phone (with menu and music) to activate the device.

2:48 — The box won't work. Seems Comcast wrongly registered it to the personal account of my assistant, Brian.

3:25 — After a half-hour on hold, a supervisor shifts the registration to my account.

3:40 — The box is activated and works — for all Digital Preferred channels except AXS. No one seems to know why.

4:05 — The tech department discovers I have the "small HD converter box" that only gets certain channels. A larger box is an additional $10.

4:07 — The tech guy checks the closing time of my local Service Center and happily reports that I have until 5 o'clock to pickup the bigger box.

4:48 — I grudgingly arrive at the facility to find a note on the door: "Closing today at 4."

6:20 — Danny's network of tech-savvy college friends discovers a presumably unauthorized website that distributes the AXS signal for free, without Digital Preferred, without a small box or a big box, without self-installation fees. Without any hassle.

6:30 — We watch the Hoya's victory.

Friday, 10 a.m. — I am unable to phone the local Comcast Service Center because they don't permit customer calls. The national 800 operator says if I care to speak with them I'll have to drive over.

10:45 — Brian goes and hands his cellphone to the clerk. I ask to speak with the manager and learn that "he was fired last week." I ask to speak to someone in charge and am told that person "is on vacation." Brian is handed the bigger converter box.

The rest of my day is spent deliberating whether to keep or cancel my "improved" service. I also ponder the proposed cable merger, concluding that reduced competition will only make things worse.

Cable customers put up with a lot, but at some point we hold a grudge.

MONTANA WESTERN'S MCCLOUD NAMED NAIA ALL-AMERICAN

The 2014 American Football Coaches Association named the University of Montana Western's Jesse McCloud to the NAIA All-American Team on Dec. 16.

McCloud was selected to the 2014 NAIA Coaches' All-American Second Team for his work during the past season for the 6-5 Montana Western Bulldogs, despite missing two games due to injury. The AFCA All-American Teams are selected exclusively by collegiate coaches and are considered the most prestigious of the post-season awards.

McCloud, a 6-foot, 196-pound safety from Manhattan, Mont., concluded a four-year career this season as a starting safety for the Bulldogs, playing his final two seasons for Coach B.J. Robertson.

"I'm very excited to see Jesse recognized for his hard work and leadership," said Robertson. "Being named an All-American is a great reward."

McCloud appeared in nine games during the 2014 season and recorded 60 total tackles. The safety had 5 interceptions this season, which placed him in the top-20 nationally for interceptions per game and total interceptions. In his 40-game career as a Bulldog, McCloud accumulated 246 total tackles, 13 interceptions and two blocked kicks.

McCloud will remain at Montana Western this spring to complete course requirements for a K-12 Education degree in art and a K-12 physical education and health minor.

BAKE SALE

The Reichle School Booster club will be having a bake sale
December 22nd from 11 am to 7 pm at Rocky Mountain Supply.
Help our kids raise funds for their Washington D.C. trip. This trip is a great experience for the kids! Pies, cookies and many other holiday goodies will be available. Get your pies for Christmas and support a great group of kids in the process.

MAVERICK MOUNTAIN

Time to get your skies out of the garage and ski gloves out of the closet. Maverick Mountain opens Saturday, Dec. 20th. Lets go skiing!!!

THE IMPORTANCE OF READING

Soon the movie "UNBROKEN" will be in a theater near us.
Christmas is an anniversary day for many of us that were Prisoners Of War during one of the Wars in past years. I never would have known how important it would turn out, that I had read so many stories about so many different things. I know of a number of people who will go and see the movie "UNBROKEN".

When the book "Five Years to Freedom" was written by a friend of mine, it took me a year to read because it brought up many things that I had lived through. Now With "UNBROKEN" becoming a movie. I remember Louie Zamperinis brother, Pete Zamperini being my track coach in High School and when I went back to see Pete after my return that I found out the full story about Louie and his POW days.

I have seen how this new movie may be of help for many of us.
So Please take the time to read, if not go see the movie.

Sincerely, Happy Holidays and a very MERRY CHRISTMAS
TO ALL.

GEORGE FRYETT
