2015 Precap
By Peter Funt

The year gone by was marked by a tangle of stories involving midterm elections, grand juries and scandalous outfits worn by Sasha and Malia Obama. No need for a tedious yearend recap. Here instead is a precap of news certain to break in 2015:

JAN. 1 - President Obama ushers in the New Year with a passel of executive orders. In one action likely to anger Republicans, the president announces that Mark Udall of Colorado and Kay Hagan of North Carolina, along with other defeated Democrats, will not be forced to leave the Senate for three years. "We must deal with the fact," explained the president, "that our election system is broken."

JAN. 6 - As the 114th Congress convenes, GOP leaders pledge to "reach across the aisle" and swiftly pass a bill making Ronald Reagan's birthday, Feb. 6, a federal holiday.

JAN. 18 - Yielding to public pressure, the Washington Redskins unveil a name change. "We should honor our players' heritage," states owner Dan Snyder in announcing that his team will now be called the Washington Darkies.

FEB. 6 - As the nation pauses to celebrate Ronald Reagan's birthday, President Obama signs an executive order delaying the holiday for three years.

FEB. 10 - Two more women, identified only as Jane Doe 121 and Jane Doe 122, report inappropriate sexual behavior by the comedian Bill Cosby. Cosby's lawyer says he expects another "hundred or so" women to come forward with "copycat fabrications."
