Media Are Out to Get Everyone

By Peter Funt

Journalists pass a litmus test for fairness in covering politics when both parties hate their work.

It's refreshing, therefore, at this early stage of the 2016 presidential campaign, to hear Democrats criticizing so-called liberal media, and Republicans chastising conservative media.

Republican Donald Trump attacked Fox News for its questioning in the first GOP debate. He appeared to be in stunned disbelief that reporters at Fox would dare toss anything but softballs his way. Fox reporters, he said, should be "ashamed."

Across the aisle, listen to James Carville, chum of the Clintons and mouthpiece for the left, speaking the other day on MSNBC. About Jeff Bezos, owner of The Washington Post: "He ought to go on 15th Street where the Post is and get the place in order. There's nobody editing that newspaper as far as I can see." Carville fumed because a Post analyst dared write that Democrats were in a "freakout" over slippage in Hillary Clinton's campaign.

Are mainstream reporters treating Clinton fairly? According to Carville, "It's mostly stupid media people talking to other stupid media people and making stuff up."

That sounds frighteningly like the way conservatives sound off about media — all the way back to Vice President Spiro Agnew's 1970 crack about "Nattering nabobs of negativism." The rest of Agnew's comment is all but lost to history, yet intriguing. He went on to say that media "have formed their own 4-H Club: the hopeless, hysterical hypochondriacs of history."

Agnew's remarks, penned by the eloquent conservative William Safire, helped launch a half-century of mistrust by some Republicans — the "silent majority" — of mainstream media in America.

In the current campaign, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker's staff is becoming what Politico calls "the most press-averse group in the Republican field." That Walker is afraid of scrutiny by left-leaning organizations is one thing, but the conservative Wall Street Journal? Following a conference call with Walker, the Journal's Stephanie Armour tweeted, "First time as a reporter

I've ever had my questions pre-screened before I could ask them."

In talking with diehards in both major parties, I hear an almost-nonstop refrain that media — all media — are out to get their candidate. They're not referring to columnists and commentators who, by job description, are biased. They're talking about reporters at established, mainstream outlets, from The New York Times and Wall Street Journal to CBS News and Fox News. As partisans see it, it's pretty much all-bias all the time.

Many liberals are convinced, for example, that The Times has it in for the Clintons. They see prejudice in almost every news story, no matter how benign. Lately, they also believe The Times has a bias against Hillary Clinton's closest rival, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders.

The left-leaning Huffington Post sliced and diced a Times feature about Sanders, calling it "mildly and cheerfully disparaging." The piece carried the headline: "The Times Doctrine on Bernie Sanders," but when it was picked up word-for-word by Salon, the headline was changed to: "Bernie Sanders gets slimed by The New York Times."

The Times report didn't "slime" Sanders at all. Yet, media paranoia has reached a level where many see demons lurking in coverage that is even slightly critical of any candidate they favor.

Is there bias among news media? Probably, in certain quarters, to some degree. But at this point in the long slog to Election Day 2016, many in mainstream media deserve credit for treating all candidates with appropriate skepticism.

Here's a fair and balanced news flash. The day candidates and partisans stop complaining about journalists is when we'll know the coverage is skewed.

"HOOT OWL" RESTRICTION REMOVED ON SECTION OF BIG HOLE; OTHER CLOSURES REMAIN IN PLACE

After consistent readings of lower water temperatures, Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks has lifted the "Hoot Owl" restriction on the Big Hole River prohibiting fishing from 2 p.m. to midnight on the stretch of river running from Maiden Rock Fishing Access Site to Notch Bottom Fishing Access Site.

FWP follows guidelines for fishing restrictions and closures as set by the Big Hole Drought Management Plan developed in coordination with the Big Hole Watershed Committee.

The following stretches of the Big Hole remain closed to all fishing:

•Big Hole River Saginaw Bridge on Skinner Meadows Road to North Fork Big Hole River

•Big Hole River Notch Bottom Fishing Access Site to the confluence with the Beaverhead River

The following stretches of Region 3 rivers remain closed to all fishing

SOUTHWEST MT HUNTERS: DON'T WAIT TO WEIGH IN!

FWP SEEKS PUBLIC INPUT ON
2016-2017 HUNTING SEASONS

Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks invites hunters, outfitters, landowners and others to get involved now to help set hunting seasons for 2016 and 2017.

Season setting is a process the Department goes through every two years to consider changes to hunting seasons (i.e. season dates, changes to district boundaries, quota changes, etc.). Most of Montana's huntable species are included in this process (deer, elk, antelope, moose, bighorn sheep, mountain goat, black bear, mountain lion, and upland game birds).

Region 3 Wildlife and Enforcement staff members are currently evaluating seasons and possible changes to be presented to the Fish and Wildlife Commission for its initial consideration in December. For that reason, now is a great time for interested individuals and groups to weigh in and help shape proposals at this early stage. In January, the proposals (in a defined set of recommended changes) will come back to the public with several meetings to be held around the region.

Initial comments and ideas on hunting regulation and adjustments can be submitted online by visiting FWP's website fwp.mt.gov, then click "2016-17 Hunting Seasons". The deadline to submit these initial comments is Sept. 3.

Letter to the Editor

"Trust, but verify."

That was Ronald Reagan's adage when dealing with the Soviet Union, and we have oft remembered it when it comes to Barack Obama's foolish nuclear deal with Iran. That isn't to say Obama's never heard those words. But he missed the memo that you don't let the other guy do the verifying. We've previously reported that Iran will be allowed to control any sampling at the Parchin Weapons Complex rather than the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) collecting the samples. The deal's 24-day waiting period for IAEA access to nuclear sites is bad enough, but it defies belief that Iran would be allowed to control sampling at Parchin, where past military-related testing had been one of the major sticking points until Obama and John Kerry waved their hands and said it no longer mattered.

It matters enormously, and allowing the suspect to control what evidence is presented for review is incomprehensible.

(See the wonders it's done for Hillary Clinton.)
