CANDIDATE FOR HOUSE DISTRICT #72

With one foot moving closer to the shade and the other firmly planted on a foundation of unyielding despair, I announce my candidacy for House District 72.

I suspect many voters share my present state of mind, especially those bearing witness to the current self-mutilation of the Republican Party. I guess that is what they get for pandering to the anti-government constituents in the Party.

For voters desiring more ad nauseam go to www.mtgap.org for basic delusional platform pandering such as the following:

"We support the granting of federally managed public lands to the state, and development of a transition plan for the timely and orderly transfer."

Ah! Come on, Man! When will this nonsense stop? Montana voters have rejected this "transition plan," a scheme that has Montana State Senator Jennifer Fielder, finger prints all over it. This land grab failed in Malheur and will fail in Montana.

As customary, candidates are requested to present a brief biographical history. Here is mine:

- Born 1938 Tacoma, Washington
- Served in U.S. Army 1957-59 under the command of President Eisenhower
- College graduate University of Idaho, 1964
- Public school teacher for 13 years
- Married for 47 years to the same human
- Board member, Montana ACLU for 2 years
- Worked and traveled in third world countries
- Card carrying member of the Sierra Club, the Defenders of Wildlife and a
- Charter member of Montana Coalition for Stream Access.
- Self-employed 1980-2016
- Lifelong Democrat who with open mind and eyes wide open voted for
- Richard Nixon and Marc Racicot

So why do I wax poetic about unyielding despair? My answer in 3 words: "anthropogenic climate change."

Rapid climate change is human caused. It's a peer reviewed scientific fact. For any elected politician, Democrat, Republican, or Independent, to not acknowledge scientific facts is immoral and irresponsible.

LETTER TO EDITOR

Last month, about 80 people, mostly locals, gathered for two days to discuss ways to make Beaverhead County healthier with a particular focus to reduce the stigma of mental illness and our county's high suicide rate. The two-day summit "Integrating Behavioral and Physical Health in Rural Southwestern Montana" was funded by a grant from the Montana Healthcare Foundation. Attendees represented a wide cross-section of our community from law enforcement to health care providers to schools to interested citizens. The collective synergy and concern to create resilient children and families was powerful.

Despite recognized deficits such as distance to providers and scant resources, participants identified strong, positive community strengths such as a spirit of independence and ingenuity, which we want to harness to make a healthier, happier population.

After the summit, the implementation committee selected four main areas to develop: 1) integrate a community-based ACE (adverse childhood experiences) program in Beaverhead County to reduce trauma, build resiliency and improve whole-person health. ACE studies indicate that children who experience traumatic events can suffer life-long consequences that negatively affect them as individuals and also their communities.

2) Address the need for adult and child behavioral health crisis management and aftercare. Many times our residents in crisis go without services or they are sent to other communities or the State Hospital, removing them from their local support system while creating costs to the county.

3) Integrate behavioral health programs within the criminal justice system in Beaverhead County. Oftentimes our jail houses people with mental health issues, which again, is not only harmful for the individual suffering from an untreated mental illness, but costly to the county.

4) Integrate community-wide behavioral health screening and other preventative approaches in Beaverhead County. The consensus at the summit was that we as a community need to do a better job recognizing when our fellow citizens are not doing well. It is common to support those experiencing medical crises while those suffering from mental health crises are overlooked. One thing we can do is to screen people for depression and help them access resources before they succumb to hopelessness. If interested in participating in a task force, contact Public Health Director Sue Hansen (683-3179).

Easter: The Next Generation

Tyrades! By Danny Tyree

Palm Sunday will find me back in an adult Sunday school class, after having taught the class of my 12-year-old son Gideon for the past several months.

I hope Gideon will remain respectful of those with differing views of Jesus Christ (whether they regard him as A prophet but not THE Prophet, a nice Jewish boy with a Messiah complex, a wise non-divine teacher whose followers got carried away, a complete fabrication or whatever), but without apologizing for his core beliefs.

In other words, he shouldn't be "in your face" but should also avoid a wimpy proclamation of "He is risen, he is risen with an asterisk."

An increasingly irreligious world that gets its view of the Son of God from sensationalized documentaries and TV musicals will stray further and further from the truth. Someday when he's teaching Sunday school for my hypothetical grandchildren, I hope Gideon will be able to overcome increasingly muddled legends, factoids and agendas about Jesus and Easter.

For example, it's okay to point out that Jesus cast seven demons out of Mary Magdalene. It is historically inaccurate to say that he told her, "With the free version, the demons still tag along to the mall with you and your friends. Now, if you want to upgrade to the Premium exorcism..."

The people of Flint, Michigan did not tell Jesus, "Forget wine! Turn the stuff coming out of our faucets into water!"

Jesus's Triumphant Entry into Jerusalem did not involve looking at the throng of well-wishers and muttering, "Ooo, I'd like to smite that guy on both cheeks!"

The apostles did not launch a media blitz specifically trumpeting the inclusion of the first plus-size models in the Book of Life.

The words "Last Supper" and "all-day breakfast menu" appear together in absolutely no early church writings that survive.

No matter what your friends tell you, there was no Jumbotron available when Judas betrayed Jesus with a kiss. And there was no advertising slogan that began "Every kiss begins with 30 pieces of silver."

Peter's triple denial of Christ had absolutely nothing to do with whether the crowing cock was raised in a cage. Likewise, it is not true that Jesus's prayer in the Garden of Gethsemane was that no one would find out that the garden was GMO.

Contrary to popular belief, the crown of thorns Jesus was subjected to at the Crucifixion did not include a beer dispenser. Early Christians thought of Jesus as the Fountain of Life rather than the Streaming Media of Life.

The angel proclaiming the Good News at the Empty Tomb was distinguished by white garments, not White Privilege.

In the future, people will probably lose interest in carbon dating the Shroud of Turin and will instead concentrate on whether it was moisture-wicking and whether any "wardrobe malfunctions" ever occurred with it.

Jesus's Ascension into heaven should not be trivialized as his partaking in "cloud storage."

Alas, even the secular aspects of Easter will be under fire 25 or so years from now. GPS will make a mockery of Easter egg hunts, candy will be made of solar photons instead of sugar and old-timers will talk about 2016 as the Bad Old Days.

"Can you believe there used to be a time when rabbits didn't get to vote? Hey, let's swing by the rabbit cemetery and resurrect Congressman Smith's chances of getting reelected..."
