What I Brought With Me to the Republican National Convention

Raging Moderate by Will Durst

The national political conventions are a lot like professional wrestling. Sure, we know what's going to happen, but every four years, it's fun to see who's throwing around chairs and getting slammed into the turnbuckle.

Each gathering offers up unique opportunities for mocking and scoffing and taunting purposes. And this Republican meeting on the banks of an eerie lake promises wacky zany antics o'plenty; like a Ringling Bros. Circus tent with all the poles chewed through by termites in the middle of a Nor'easter.

Yours truly is now in the land of Cleve, and I'm enjoying being embedded in the upper Midwest just in time for the Humidity Festival the way a crustacean enjoys boiling water. I also have plans to travel to the delphia of Phil, but for now here a list of indispensable items I've taken with me to the first part of this summer sojourn.

Convention in Cleveland, Ohio:

White shoes and belt to blend in with the fashion style known as the "Full Cleveland." A Trump University alumni ring to flash at security checkpoints. "Make America Grate Again" hat.

A Cleveland Browns golf towel to wipe away the tears when visiting the Lee Atwater exhibit at the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. The secret password to get into the Log Cabin Republicans party, which always has the best appetizers.

An umbrella, because the last two GOP national conventions were shortened a day because of hurricanes. Also, it's designed to protect from the deluge of partisan splooney that has descended on the 216 area code.

Two packages of Tums to follow up taste tour of local pierogi shops. A bandanna soaked in eyewash for a walk through the protest pit. An Anonymous ID to present to authorities when apprehended in the protest pit. A Guy Fawkes mask.

A couple of Bill Cosby albums for Roger Ailes to play at the Fox News party to help female staffers get "in the mood."

Two stories of scaffolding and a case of hair spray in the unlikely event of being conscripted to groom The Donald's hair.

A chauffeur's cap to facilitate commandeering a limo after attending one of the good parties. A baker's dozen of Krispy Kreme donuts to assuage the ego of Chris Christie. Snake bite serum. A "Six Wives Club" t-shirt with the Donald and the Newt's pictures on it. A DVD of "Hoosiers" to get a sense of the Mike Pence experience. Director's cut. 12 pack of Viagra for Bob Dole to sign. Sunglasses to protect eyes from the legions of journalists and politicians who overused their white strips.

A hand mirror to occasionally hold up to the personality-challenged Mike Pence's lips to insure he's breathing.

A dowsing rod to root out the GOP donors who kept insisting that Jeb Bush was "the smart one." A roll of dimes, which, as waitresses all over town will be able to tell you, is the traditional Republican tip. Portable espresso machine to stash in hotel room in attempt to stay awake.

Copy of the "Kama Sutra" to keep track of Donald Trump's ever changing positions. One Golden State Warriors sweatshirt in anticipation of next year's rubber match.

Attorney General Fox Tells Congress to Stop Agency Overreach

Montana Attorney General Tim Fox joined a coalition of 15 state attorneys general in urging Congress to rein in federal agencies that create and enforce regulations.

The letter, sent on July 11 to House and Senate leadership, explains federal agencies are acting outside of their congressionally delegated authority, circumventing the law by issuing binding rules in the guise of "guidance" documents, failing to consider the costs of regulations, and unnecessarily overriding existing state laws.

"In the last several years we've seen federal courts strike down or suspend a number of unilateral actions by federal agencies," Fox said. "The courts have halted the so-called 'clean power plan,' the president's executive action on amnesty for illegal immigrants, and the Waters of the U.S. regulations. Enough is enough. We are asking Congress to ensure federal agencies respect the rule of law and act only within their legal authority."

Montana's Senator Steve Daines is also calling for regulatory reform. "Congress should require more back-end accountability from bureaucrats in the rulemaking process to ensure individuals are not abused by the system, especially with the current administration's misuse of power. I applaud Attorney General Fox for drawing attention to this important issue and 100% support much-needed regulatory reforms."

One problem the letter highlights is the trend among agencies to make binding rules through so-called guidance documents. The letter cites the federal Administrative Procedures Act as requiring a notice and comment period for any change an agency wants to enact. This allows those affected to give their opinion and prepare.

Federal agencies have been avoiding this process with so-called guidance documents, which are meant to offer non-binding advice, but are increasingly being used to create new binding regulations and sanctions for those who don't comply.

Federal agencies also are acting outside the bounds of their authority, and do not consider existing state law or the costs of regulation.

The letter explains that congressional action is needed because it can take years to block the unlawful initiatives in court, so long that many regulated entities will have spent significant time and money that they cannot get back.

Montana, Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Georgia, Kansas, Michigan, Nevada, North Dakota, Ohio, South Carolina, Texas, Utah, West Virginia, and Wisconsin signed the letter.

He enjoys serving the community by helping patients improve their quality of life through exceptional dental care and through staying current with the latest dental techniques. Dr. Hughes cares about developing strong doctor/patient relationships and tries to enhance the patient experience by taking a personal interest in each person.
