Welborn's Weekly Senate Report

Helena:

The second week of the 65th session of the Montana legislature is in the books. Now we find ourselves working on solutions to the challenges of a major shortfall in the state budget. Even as a new member on Senate Finance (appropriations), I have to say the Executive Branch's proposed fix to Montana's fiscal crisis is un-sustainable. A band aid solution if you will of transfers, fund shifts, and tax increases that will not provide long-term stability for our State, nor will it help avert future financial crises. Real investment, sacrifice, and systematic reform are what's needed to put our house back in order.

When the legislature adjourned in 2015 there was nearly $400 million plus in the state's savings account. It's disappointing to return with virtually nothing remaining in the bank.

I will first of all say that revenues did decline below what was forecasted, as these things can happen. However, in the world most of us live in, we have to lower expenses to match our income, certainly long before consuming 300 million plus in savings. It is normally through quick decisive action, that fiscal train wrecks are avoided. In our individual households, and in our businesses alike, we are held to this standard and I feel that our Governor's budget office should be held to the same standard.

A more responsible solution, recognized early, would have been far less painful for Montanans. Now, when we make difficult decisions as a legislature, to cut vital services, it catches many Montanans flat footed, but again we have been saddled with making these decisions out of necessity. As proposed, many of the components of the Governor's budget are "quick fixes" rather than long term sustainable plans. I compare it to putting air in a low tire while never addressing the underlying cause of the leak. Eventually the tire will blow, and a wreck could result. Proposed solutions such as raiding the fire fund, when eventually there will be a costly fire season, or depleting infrastructure accounts when we know there is roads and bridges that are failing, are wreck less policy also.

Worse yet, proposing tax increases on Montana's job creators. While this does generate a short-term gain in state's bank account, the result is long-term decline as job creators and taxpayers may leave the state.

Regardless of the cause, we are simply where we find ourselves. It is time to move forward and address the problem, not only for today (putting air in the tire), but long term for tomorrow (patching and replacing bad tires including realignment if necessary). Fiscal discipline combined with supervisory and regulatory reforms will not only get Montana back on track, but will make our state more immune to future

ZONING WHEN YOU WANT IT WHEN YOU DON'T

By: Lynn Westad

A few reasons you don't want zoning regulations:

1. Want to have a home business breeding & boarding dogs in a residential zone.
2. Want no setbacks so everyone can extend buildings out to the property lines
3. Want to build an 8 ft. brick fence on all four sides of property
4. Want to have heavy vehicle traffic business with little parking
5. Want a medical marijuana shop anywhere business or residential area
6. Want a tow lot/junk yard anywhere
7. Want a college boarding house next door to home or business
8. Want no guidelines on type of or number of signs allowed.

TEN REASONS YOU WANT ZONING REGULATIONS

I could do ten reasons but I will only outline 5 why you would not want these uses in your community.

1. Consider how fast do you think your home would sell with a dog kennel next door?

2. Think what it would be like to have a marijuana shop next to your home or business.

3. How unpleasant our neighborhoods would be without space between buildings or no open space in front. Do you want to be that close to your neighbor?

4. Do you want someone living in an RV with no water hookup or sewer?

5. Use your imagination on what could happen with no guidelines.

We all think we want no rules on how we use our property until our neighbor does something we don't find inappropriate. Some of these may seem extreme but they happen and have happened here. Zoning protects your right for a safe, healthy environment where you live or have a business. This is the only way the majority of the community can be protected from the few that are not good neighbors.
