Montana's Statewide Inventory of Unsubmitted Sex Assault Kits Federally Certified

The Montana Department of Justice announced that its inventory of previously unsubmitted sex assault kits has been federally certified and that lab testing of the kits will begin this month.

Last September, Montana was awarded a $2 million federal Sexual Assault Kit Initiative (SAKI) grant to inventory, test, and track unsubmitted sex-assault evidence kits across the state. That same month, Montana also received an additional $284,500 grant specifically for kit tracking.

Joan Eliel, SAKI Site Coordinator for the Montana Department of Justice, submitted the inventory of 1,140 kits to the federal SAKI technical support staff for review at the end of May. When the team's review was complete, the inventory was sent to the grantor, the Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA) at the United States Department of Justice, for certification. The BJA announced last week it had certified Montana's inventory, validating its count of the unsubmitted kits.

Attorney General Tim Fox said, "Federal certification of Montana's unsubmitted sex assault kit inventory is an important milestone toward meeting our goals of ensuring all unsubmitted sexual assault kits in Montana are tested, and eliminating the accumulation of unsubmitted kits in the future."

Now that the inventory has been federally certified, the kits will be sent in phases to Sorenson Labs in Salt Lake City for testing. Marshall University in Huntington, West Virginia will perform the technical review of the test results to ensure sufficient basis for the scientific conclusions; review must be complete before a DNA profile can be entered into the FBI's Combined DNA Index System, or CODIS. This system enables federal, state, and local forensic labs to exchange and compare DNA profiles electronically, linking serial violent crimes to each other and to known offenders.

This fall, the Sexual Assault Evidence Task Force meets again to discuss policies and procedures on best practices for how local jurisdictions should uniformly handle sex assault kits.

In response to nationwide concerns over unsubmitted sex assault evidence kits in communities across the country, Attorney General Tim Fox took a pro-active approach in Montana two years ago. His office conducted a statewide poll of the state's sheriffs and police chiefs to estimate the number of unsubmitted kits being stored in law enforcement agencies across the state. At that same time, Attorney General Fox brought together a variety of stakeholders as part of his Sexual Assault Evidence Task Force, and asked the group to determine precisely how many unsubmitted evidence kits existed in Montana.

Thank you

Thank you to the guys of the Catholic 4th Day group & to the guys of the VFW & American Legion for taking time out of their daily lives to drive Dale Buckingham to butte for his tri-weekly dialysis. You are appreciated.

A Job Well Done

On Friday July 7 starting at 6:00 PM, Beaverhead County Disaster and Emergency Services, Beaverhead County Public Health and other entities conducted a full-scale exercise to test the coordination and operation of all emergency services in Dillon. The exercise was based on a motor vehicle accident involving Hazardous Materials and two casualties. It began with a citizen calling in the report of an accident, the dispatcher making the necessary notifications and calls, response from Law Enforcement and First Responders, rescue and recovery of the victims by the Dillon Fire Department, Decontamination on patients and equipment on site, transport and initial care of the patients by Beaverhead Ambulance, notification of residents near the accident scene and assistance with control of the isolation zone by Beaverhead County Search and Rescue, and further decontamination and treatment of patients by Barrett Hospital.

I am very proud to announce that the exercise was nearly flawless and that it was a learning experience for all those involved. Exercises such as this help to address the needs for improvement in response plans and training and equipment needs. The high level of training, dedication and professionalism was proven by the Dillon Fire Department, Beaverhead Ambulance, Beaverhead County Public Health, Dillon Police Department, Beaverhead County Sheriff, Beaverhead County Dispatchers, Search and Rescue, Barrett Hospital personnel, Montana Disaster and Emergency Services, as well as our actors. Thank you to all those involved!

We must remember as a community that the majority of the personnel in Emergency Services are Volunteers and are giving their time and sweat (literally!) to assistant and protect all of us.

Sincerely,

Beaverhead County Disaster and Emergency Services

Letter to the Editor

Ted Ori's award for Montana Assistant Coach of the Year is well deserved and long overdue!

Ted has always been a great coach, dating back to his grade school years. Yes, his grade school years!

Growing up with Ted's younger brother Keith, I caught the "sports bug" from the Ori family. From first grade forward through high school, Ted was the go-to-guy as student-player-coach for baseball, basketball, and football for me as well as numerous other kids.

Ted was an extremely gifted athlete in all sports. However, his best athletic gift was not playing sports, but rather teaching-sharing his diverse knowledge and skills with younger kids like me.

The Ori family was very welcoming to me and others, who enjoyed watching the big games such as the 1968 UCLA-Houston basketball game at their home. (Google the 1968 game for its significance in sports history.)

Few if any coaches can say their coaching debut and accomplishments began when they were in third grade. But Ted can!

It is not hyperbole to say that Ted Ori should be recognized as Montana Community Coach of Five Decades (even if no such award exists), dating back to his third-grade coaching debut as a student. I added the word Community to this award because Ted's 50-year coaching career extended both on and off the sports field to wider community members.

Congratulations Coach!
