Attorney General Fox Asks Congress to Amend Sex Trafficking Law

Attorney General Tim Fox joined 49 other state and territorial attorneys general in a bi-partisan coalition urging Congress to affirm that all law enforcement agencies retain their traditional authority to fight sex trafficking. In a letter to Congress, the attorneys general ask representatives to amend the Communications Decency Act (CDA) to clarify that states, localities, and territories retain authority to investigate and prosecute facilitators of child sex trafficking wherever they operate, including online. The simple word addition to the CDA proposed in this letter will help ensure that citizens and children are effectively protected throughout the entire country, in all courts.

"The Communications Decency Act was drafted back in 1996, when the Internet was in its infancy. Its original purpose was to protect children from accessing indecent materials online, but courts have interpreted certain provisions of the Act to provide immunity from State prosecution to online classified ad sites, like Backpage.com, that promote and profit from human trafficking," Attorney General Tim Fox said. "We need to be sure federal law provides local prosecutors the tools they need to fight back against those who use technology to promote sexual exploitation of children," Attorney General Fox added.

"Federal enforcement alone has proved insufficient to stem the growth in online promotion of child sex trafficking. Those on the front lines of the battle against the sexual exploitation of children – state and local law enforcement – must have clear authority to investigate and prosecute facilitators of these and other horrible crimes," reads the letter, which was led by Florida Attorney General Pam Bondi and District of Columbia Attorney General Karl A. Racine.

The intention of the CDA is to protect children from indecent material online. It was never was intended to place facilitators of child sex trafficking outside the reach of law enforcement. However, according to the attorneys general, the CDA is being used as a shield by those who profit from prostitution and crimes against children. In some cases, courts have interpreted certain provisions of the CDA to provide immunity from state prosecution to online classified ad sites, such as Backpage.com, that promote and profit from human trafficking.

"It is both ironic and tragic that the CDA, which was intended to protect children from indecent material on the Internet, is now used as a shield by those who profit from prostitution and crimes against children," the attorneys general wrote.

In addition to Florida and the District of Columbia, the following states and territories signed onto the letter: Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Delaware, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Puerto Rico, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

Remembering The King of the Comic Books

Tyrades! by Danny Tyree

Duos. When I was growing up in the Sixties, I depended on Huntley and Brinkley for the news, Flatt and Scruggs for bluegrass music, Rowan and Martin for topical humor and Stan and Jack for four-color thrills.

"Stan and Jack?" you ask. Surely you remember Stan "The Man" Lee and Jack "King" Kirby, the core creative forces of the Marvel Comics "bullpen."

Stan is still remarkably active at age 94. Alas, Jack died at age 76 on February 6, 1994. Even after the passage of 23 years, his influence looms so large that this month DC Comics is issuing brand-new special issues of some of his creations to commemorate the 100th anniversary of his birth (August 28).

Hardcore comics collectors will undoubtedly mark the occasion; but as a writer with one foot in fandom and one in the mainstream media, I wanted to use my weekly space to make sure the general public knows about the centennial.

The world would be much poorer without the characters Kirby shaped. With Lee, he co-created The Fantastic Four, The Mighty Thor, The Incredible Hulk, Iron Man, The Inhumans (soon to be an ABC series), Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D., The Silver Surfer, The Black Panther (coming soon to a theater near you), the original X-Men, the Avengers, Groot and Ego the Living Planet (both currently in "Guardians of the Galaxy") and much more.

Like "Star Trek," the Lee-Kirby collaborations held out hope for mankind and the triumph of good over evil.

But that was just the middle part of Kirby's career. Before the U.S. entered World War II, he and partner Joe Simon created Captain America. After the war, they created the wildly popular romance comics genre and numerous other projects.

Although most of his post-Sixties creations for various publishers weren't as iconic as the so-called "Silver Age" Marvel heroes and villains, they remain properties with enduring appeal.

Besides working in comic books, Kirby also made his mark in newspaper comics and TV animation.

During his long career, Kirby managed to be both prolific and quality-conscious. He innovated and brought depth to his masterpieces, but there was an unpretentious meat-and-potatoes aura about his epics. The stories made sense.

Kirby's works were accessible to those who would become lifelong comics-collecting geeks, those who would follow him into the comics profession and the millions who "outgrew" comics but nonetheless needed those precious years of escapism while dealing with deceased pets, dictatorial teachers or childhood illnesses.

The Kirby Awards, the Jack Kirby Museum and "Kirby Collector" magazine all attest to the place Kirby holds in the hearts of comics fans.

At the time of his death, Kirby was both a creative force-to-be-reckoned-with and an elder statesman helping comics creators gain more control over their creations in negotiations with faceless corporations.

Kirby was unleashing his boundless imagination in the comics medium long before there were comic book shops, comic book conventions or comic book price guides. Now that comics are experiencing a cultural resurgence, I hope you will honor Kirby's memory by checking out reprints of his work at your favorite comics shop or bookstore. Relive past glories or experience the Kirby magic for the first time.

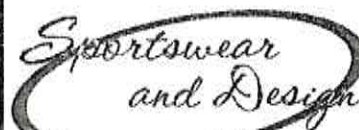

If the blues are getting you down, just look them squarely in the eye like that Lee-Kirby creation The Thing ("the guy made of orange rocks") and shout, "It's clobberin' time!"

Siri: What Is Football's Future?

By Peter Funt

Will football someday become the world's first virtual professional sport?

With the NFL's preseason underway, high school and college players back on the practice fields, and tens of thousands of fantasy leagues conducting their annual drafts, let's put the question another way:

Which will happen first: the collapse of the NFL due to a shortage of players willing to risk injury? Or the development of computer-based football so compelling and unpredictable that it actually replaces the pro game loved by millions of fans?

For now, both scenarios seem far fetched - but something's gotta give. Football is being jolted as never before by both scientific and anecdotal evidence about the effects of repeated blows to the head.

What could the long-term future possibly be for a sport in which, for example, 40 former pros conduct a charity golf tournament (in California this summer) to raise money for research on traumatic brain injuries? For a game in which more than 2,000 women turn to a Facebook page devoted to the health consequences faced by their loved ones employed as pro players?

The Federation of State High School Associations tabulates that participation in football has fallen for the fourth straight year - with the latest seasonal drop totaling roughly 26,000 players. If the pipeline of human pro players eventually dries up, perhaps replacements will emerge from computer labs.

In fact, pro football has been inching toward "virtual" status for over three decades. The crude computer efforts of the early 1980's, developed by companies such as Nintendo, have evolved into modern, high-definition versions so life-like that they are played by many NFL pros in their spare time.

The NFL has enthusiastically supported this - in large part because of the license fees, but also, I believe, with an eye toward the future. The league also backs fantasy football, which continues to grow in popularity as more and more fans create and manage their own teams in computer-based leagues.

The problem, of course, is that computer games and fantasy leagues depend, at least for now, on real players and real on-field results. But that might someday change.

Consider what two of my acquaintances, one a former pro player, the other an armchair fanatic, say when asked about the state of football today.

The fan explains that he never goes to games anymore - they're too expensive, too rowdy and, moreover, not as enjoyable as watching on a large-screen, high-def television. He prefers a comfy chair, with reasonably-priced snacks at hand and a computer propped on his lap to track multiple fantasy squads.

The former pro explains that if the average fan were ever to stand on the field during an NFL game he would be so sickened by the sounds of collisions and screams of pain that he would cease loving the sport. What you see on TV, he adds, are guys in helmets and pads looking very much like avatars in a video game. Football is the only sport in which you can watch a player for several seasons yet very possibly have no clue whatsoever about what he looks like in person.

To my mind, these two insightful fellows are describing the foundation for totally virtual football. The NFL could control it, the networks would cover it, and gamblers might even support it.

Given the pace at which computer science is advancing, a truly equivalent virtual game can likely be crafted in a decade's time.

Personally, I'm finding it increasingly difficult to rationalize my passion for a sport that is so clearly proving to cause lifelong suffering for its participants. I'm tired of all the dirty looks from my wife as she wonders why I so stubbornly support this game.

I've grown used to getting the scores and stats from Siri and Alexa. I suppose I'd be willing to have their colleagues play the game as well.
