Hateful Haters Hating Hate

Raging Moderate by Will Durst

Someone please tell the radical left to stop getting their panties in a bundle and quit calling our president a Nazi. Donald Trump proved himself a great friend of freedom when he promoted equivalency between the organized hate movement and people disgusted by them. Anyone who hates haters is equally responsible for hateful hating. That is obvious.

After a riot broke out during a Unite the Right March in Charlottesville, Virginia, there was, according to President Trump, violence "on many sides." He then sagely observed there are two sides to every story. Which is true. There are two sides to every story; it's just harder to distinguish them when one side is full of Nazis.

Sure, one group carried bats and clubs and body armor and shouted slogans denigrating Jews and blacks, but the counter-protestors purposefully dented those clubs and bats with their heads and various body parts. Many pieces of expensive defensive equipment now need to be replaced. At retail.

And yeah, someone might have driven a car into a crowd, but most of the casualties were caused by slow-footed liberals who refused to get out of the way. Then they fell to the ground, blocking further traffic by littering the surface of a major metropolitan street with toxic substances such as blood. Without a permit.

It's easy to understand why the president refuses to announce there is no room in his administration for racists. All the slots are full. But then the weenie liberal outcry became so strident, the Tweeter of the Free World was forced to fire chief strategist Steve Bannon, even after assuring us, "he is not a racist." That would have sufficed, but unfortunately 45 went on to say that neither was Bannon a drunk, fond of livestock or an incredibly bad dresser who more often than not sported gravy stains on his tie and eyebrows.

All the president wants is an even playing field. That's why he accused the media of being unfair to Nazis. Unlike the editorial room of the New York Times, our blue-collar billionaire leader hasn't forgotten that white supremacists are people too. They have feelings just like normal human beings. And needs and desires. It just so happens that one of their desires is most of us don't exist.

They're not asking us to change, they're asking us to leave. We need to look inside ourselves and ask if it's really our place to judge them based on the nature of their hate. If we prick a white supremacist, do they not bleed? If we tickle them, do they not laugh? If we poke them with a cobra do they not spawn?

A single thoughtless remark can ruin a white supremacist's entire day. We need to remind the children the correct term for someone who believes in the superiority of the white race is "alt-right." The terms "Nazi" and "racist" and "detestable buttwipe" can be so hurtful.

We must never forget that every white supremacist is as individual as a snowflake. Each of them is special. Some, more special than others. Quite a few-extra-crispy special. Many can't even pronounce supremacist, much less spell it. As Donald Trump once said, "I love the poorly educated." And now we know why: it's his unbudgable base.

Vigils Welcome: Let Us Pray

By Tom Purcell

In the wake of the tragic events in Charlottesville, Va.
- in response to the anger, violence and loss of life - many communities across the country are leading prayer vigils.

I think that is a grand idea.

I'm no theologian or philosopher, but at the age of 55, one thing has become evident. There is good in this world and there is evil - there is love and there is hate - and with every decision we make every moment of every day, we are moving toward one and away from the other.

Greek philosophers had names for what is good. They believed that prudence, temperance, courage and justice were virtues that all people longed for and should strive to master. By mastering these virtues, we are better able to do good works.

And while we're striving for good, we need to fight the bad: excessive pride, envy, gluttony, lust, anger, greed and sloth. These are known as the Seven Deadly Sins.

To be sure, this world is a battleground between good and evil, love and hate. That battle rages in every human heart. We saw hatefulness and violence rear its ugly head in Charlottesville, and we must denounce it forcefully.

And we must also pray.

Prayer, according to Dictionary.com, is a "petition or entreaty." It is a conscious attempt to embrace good and root out evil by asking God to give us the grace to do so.

To me, prayer is like tuning a radio. It is a deliberate, conscious effort to hear and understand with greater clarity what good and truth and beauty are, and then, hopefully, align ourselves and our actions with them. Hopefully, with prayer, we become more understanding, forgiving, loving and peaceful.

Some may think the concept of prayer is silly - that reaching out to a higher power to get closer to truth is silly. But you know in your own heart that it makes sense - that we all long to be more virtuous in our deeds.

Would you really enjoy a movie in which the star is a coward who runs off when the pressure gets tough? Would you root for a character motivated by hatred, or for one who risks everything for love? We are always moved by the hero who risks his or her life to achieve a greater good. We always root for the hero who is willing to die because of the power of love and good and right, not hate.

The trouble is, even the most virtuous among us struggle to do good all the time, which is why we must pray.

I'm not very skilled at praying - I certainly struggle to embrace the virtues taught to me by my Catholic faith - but I pray for the grace to become more kind, giving and understanding.

I pray that those in my country whose hearts are filled with anger and hate will be given the grace they need to overcome these emotions.

I pray that our growing polarization and lack of civility in our politics give way to peaceful, constructive discussion and unity, so we may address the many other real challenges we are up against.

Multiple scientific studies confirm that people who pray recover more quickly from health issues than those who do not. Studies show also that people who have others praying on their behalf heal more quickly than those who do not.

Hopefully, the many prayer vigils taking place around the country will give all of us greater grace to become more virtuous - to become more understanding, forgiving, loving and peaceful.

Let us pray.

WIC Breastfeeding Peer Counselor

When you're a new mom, it helps to talk to other moms who know what you're going through. That's the idea behind the WIC Peer Counseling program. Peer counselors are mothers who can share their own experiences and provide help and advice based on current research and knowledge from experts. And it works! Talking to a peer counselor during pregnancy helps women develop the confidence and skill to breastfeed successfully. Peer counselors reinforce breastfeeding recommendations in a socially and culturally appropriate context, and promote breastfeeding as an important element in the healthy development of the mother and baby.

If this sounds like something you would LOVE to do.....Beaverhead County WIC (Women, Infant, Child Supplemental Nutrition Program) is looking for a Peer Counselor to provide breastfeeding support to Beaverhead and Madison County WIC participants. Contact Sue Hansen for more information at 683-4771 or visit us at 41 Barrett Street.

Hours: Up to 4 hours/week

Wage: $10/hour (16 hours/month) No benefits

Qualifications

Must be enthusiastic for breastfeeding!

Must have basic communication skills.

Must have successfully (or is currently) breastfeeding.

Must have been (or is currently) a WIC participant.

Some of the Responsibilities Include

Available to consult with WIC participants outside clinic hours and outside the clinic environment.

Make telephone contacts from home and/or the clinic.

Conduct home and hospital visits per consult with the supervisor.

Attend statewide WIC Breastfeeding Peer Counselor calls

August is National Breastfeeding Month

Brought to you by Beaverhead County Public Health/WIC (excerpt from WHO)

Up to what age can a baby stay well nourished by just being breastfed?

Q: Up to what age can a baby stay well nourished by just being breastfed?

A: Infants should be exclusively breastfed – i.e. receive only breast milk – for the first six months of life to achieve optimal growth, development and health. "Exclusive breastfeeding" is defined as giving no other food or drink – not even water – except breast milk. It does, however, allow the infant to receive oral rehydration salts (ORS), drops and syrups (vitamins, minerals and medicines). Breast milk is the ideal food for the healthy growth and development of infants; breastfeeding is also an integral part of the reproductive process with important implications for the health of mothers.

WHO (World Health Organization) recommends that infants start receiving complementary foods at six months (180 days) of age in addition to breast milk. Foods should be adequate, meaning that they provide sufficient energy, protein and micronutrients to meet a growing child's nutritional needs. Foods should be prepared and given in a safe manner to minimize the risk of contamination. Feeding young infants requires active care and stimulation to encourage the child to eat.

The transition from exclusive breastfeeding to full use of family foods is a very vulnerable period. It is the time when many infants become malnourished, contributing significantly to the high prevalence of malnutrition in children under five years of age worldwide. It is essential therefore that infants receive appropriate, adequate and safe complementary foods to ensure the right transition from the breastfeeding period to the full use of family foods.

Amounts of foods to offer

Age	Texture	Frequency	Amount at each meal ^a
6–8 months	Start with thick porridge, well mashed foods Continue with mashed family foods	2–3 meals per day, plus frequent breastfeeds Depending on the child's appetite, 1–2 snacks may be offered	Start with 2–3 tablespoonfuls per feed, increasing gradually to ½ of a 250 ml cup
9–11 months	Finely chopped or mashed foods, and foods that baby can pick up	3–4 meals per day, plus breastfeeds Depending on the child's appetite, 1–2 snacks may be offered	½ of a 250 ml cup/bowl
12–23 months	Family foods, chopped or mashed if necessary	3–4 meals per day, plus breastfeeds Depending on the child's appetite, 1–2 snacks may be offered	¾ to full 250 ml cup/bowl

^a Note: If baby is not breastfed, give in addition: 1–2 cups of milk per day, and 1–2 extra meals per day
