Detera Medication Disposal Bags

The Chemical Dependency Bureau of DPHHS is excited to work alongside the Interagency Coordinating Council (ICC) for State Prevention Programs in announcing the most recent interagency collaboration for prevention in Montana; the procurement and upcoming arrival of 100,000 Detera medication disposal bags. Detera bags, an at-home medication disposal system or drug deactivation system does not need to be mailed-in or taken to a disposal site making them ideal for rural and frontier Montana households. These Omni degradable bags contain activated carbon that when mixed with warm water renders the pharmaceutical compounds inert and safe for household trash. By reducing the availability of unwanted, unused and leftover prescription medication, we protect individuals, homes and families, taking a step towards a safer and healthier Montana and furthering other ongoing opioid overdose prevention initiatives.

From late August to early September the disposal bags will be distributed to all 56 counties of Montana. The 26 counties without drug-take back locations or "drop-boxes" will receive a greater portion of disposal bags in attempts to reach those in rural and frontier locations. Prevention specialists working in each county will receive the bags and disperse them at pharmacies, prescribers, health departments, law enforcement and schools within your communities who will then in turn disperse bags directly to individuals and households. This is a one-time opportunity provided by the Opioid State Targeted Response grant awarded by SAMHSA, but it is possible to make individual or organizational purchases through Detera. By strengthening community awareness, response and support we can all play vital roles in reducing access to unused or unwanted prescription medications in Montana communities. 30 E. Bannack 683-3548FWP INCREASES CWD SURVEILLANCE EFFORTS

Chronic wasting disease has not yet been discovered in Montana's wild populations of deer, elk and moose, but as the disease continues to expand to the north, south and east of the state, Montana Fish, Wildlife and Park officials believe it is only a matter of time before it is in Montana.

This fall, FWP is ramping up its CWD surveillance program again with financial help from the Mule Deer Foundation and The Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation.

FWP's surveillance plan calls for rotating surveillance efforts amongst three priority areas of the state: south central, south east and north central/east. This year's focus will be on the south-central priority area.

Surveillance efforts will primarily consist of collecting samples from hunter harvested deer at game check stations and cooperating meat processors and taxidermists.

The Mule Deer Foundation donated $5,000 and the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation donated up to $10,000 toward this year's effort.

"We know the best thing we can do is increase our surveillance efforts and help from our partners is critical. The Mule Deer Foundation and RMEF both recognize the importance of doing all we can to find CWD early, if it's here," said FWP Game Management Bureau Chief John Vore. "Our best chance of containing the disease once it is detected will be finding it early."

Additionally, FWP is asking people who get salvage permits for roadkill deer in specific counties to voluntarily submit their heads for testing. Those counties are: Sheridan, Treasure, Daniels, Valley, Toole, Phillips, Liberty, Blaine, Hill, Custer, Rosebud, Musselshell, Golden Valley, Yellowstone, Carter, Sweet Grass, Park, Stillwater, Big Horn, Powder River, Carbon, Granite, and Roosevelt.

CWD is a progressive, fatal disease affecting the central nervous system of mule deer, white-tailed deer, elk and moose. It is part of a group of diseases called Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies (TSEs). TSEs are caused by infectious, mis-folded prion proteins, which cause normal prion proteins throughout a healthy animal's body to mis-fold, resulting in organ damage and eventual death.

Though there is no evidence CWD is transmissible to humans, it is recommended to never ingest meat from animals that appear to be sick or are known to be CWD positive. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommends hunters who have harvested a deer, elk, or moose from a known CWD infected area to have the animal tested prior to consuming it. If hunters harvest an animal that appears to be sick, the best thing to do is contact FWP and have the animal inspected.

FWP started testing for CWD in 1998 and has compiled more than 17,000 postmortem samples from free-ranging deer, elk and moose - all of which were negative. There is no non-invasive, reliable test for live animals. Unfortunately, federal funding for testing was cut back in 2012, so the agency now limits sampling to high-risk areas or symptomatic animals.

FWP will be focusing their surveillance efforts on mule deer, which transmit CWD more effectively than elk, moose, and whitetails. The first priority is symptomatic animals, followed by road-killed animals, whose symptoms may have contributed to their deaths. After that, the recommendation is to test seemingly healthy hunter-harvested adult bucks and does. Among mule deer, bucks are twice as likely as does to test positive for CWD.

The only documented cases of CWD in Montana were in captive elk at a game farm in Philipsburg in 1999; however, CWD has been detected in free-ranging populations in 21 other states and two Canadian provinces – some very near the border with Montana. In fact, it has been detected in all of the states or provinces with which Montana shares a border, except for Idaho and British Columbia.

In other parts of the country, wildlife management agencies have dealt with CWD for years. In Wyoming and Colorado, officials are beginning to see population declines in infected mule deer and whitetail herds due to the high prevalence of the disease.

One of the challenges with CWD is that prions remain infectious for a long time in both animals and in the environment. So as more animals become infected, the environment they inhabit becomes more infected, making control much more difficult.

As always, landowners, hunters and the public are encouraged to report animals they see in the wild that appear sick to their nearest FWP personnel. Animals exhibiting clinical symptoms of CWD are often emaciated, drooling, disoriented with an abnormal gait, and have their head and ears hung low.

Some tools are already in place to prevent the disease in Montana, such as a ban on full carcasses or certain carcass parts being brought into the state from areas with CWD, and a ban on feeding deer, which causes them to congregate. The state does not relocate cervids from one area to another, nor does it rehabilitate and release them back into the wild due to concerns over CWD.

Game farm animals are classified as alternative livestock. For more information on CWD in Montana, look online <http://fwp.mt.gov/fishAndWildlife/diseasesAndResearch/diseases/chronicWastingDisease/default.html>.

For questions about diseases in wildlife, please call the FWP Wildlife Health Lab at (406) 994-6357.

Attorney General Fox Hosts Overdose Death Investigation and Prosecution Training

Class Part of AG's Aid Montana Initiative

Attorney General Tim Fox, in partnership with the National Attorneys General Training and Research Institute (NAGTRI), hosted a training today for law enforcement officers and prosecutors on how to best build a strong investigation and successful prosecution of death cases resulting from overdoses of heroin, fentanyl, and methamphetamine.

"The enforcement of laws related to substance abuse is a large and growing component of the work done by Montana's law enforcement agencies and courts," Attorney General Tim Fox said. "We were pleased to partner with NAGTRI to develop this training as part of our Aid Montana initiative as just one of the ways we can tackle our substance abuse epidemic head on. This course offered a good opportunity for law enforcement officers and prosecutors to train alongside one another to develop strategies on how to best approach cases that result from overdose deaths."

NAGTRI is the training and research branch of the National Association of Attorneys General (NAAG). Its mission is to provide high-quality, responsive, innovative training to state and territorial attorney general offices.

"Montana was the second stop for this statewide training centered around methamphetamine, heroin, and fentanyl overdose deaths that NAGTRI is offering across the country," said Chris Toth, NAAG Deputy Executive Director and NAGTRI Director. "This course is designed to help states in the investigation and prosecution of overdose deaths and serves as one more resource to help them keep their communities safe and save lives."

The one-day course was attended by prosecutors from several Montana County Attorney Offices and law enforcement officers, including those who work undercover, from across the state.

In addition to NAGTRI faculty, presenters included Montana Department of Justice personnel: State Crime Lab Director Scott Larson, Assistant Attorney General Chad Parker, and Division of Criminal Investigation (DCI) Narcotics Bureau Chief Brad Gremaux. Topics covered included gaining a better understanding about the various tactics and components of an overdose death investigation; witness interviews, the role of different agency partners, case development, and best practices for coordinating the sharing of information among local, state, and federal agencies.
