Pioneer Mountain Range Adventure

Kyle Fadness and his grandfather Wade Hansen climbed two more peaks in the Pioneer Mountain Range in 2017, Saddleback and Tahepia. So far they have climbed 18 mountains over 10,000 feet, and the only two mountains over 11,000 feet, Torrey and Tweedy. They started this annual event when Kyle was 5 years old, and at 21 Kyle now attends Montana Tech in Butte. Some of the mountains they have climbed are unnamed, but of the 17 named mountains over 10,000 feet they have two peaks left to climb, Sawtooth and Barb, which they plan to climb in 2018.

At the age of 68 Hansen now has more time to hike in the mountains. In the months of

May through November of 2017, Hansen hiked over 400 miles in 10 different mountain ranges including the Snowy, Crazy, Abasarokee, Mission, Beartooth, Pioneer, Tendoy, and Beaverhead Mountain ranges. Also 2 mountain ranges in the Bob Marshall Wilderness, the Swan Range and the Lewis and Clark Range. About half the time Hansen hiked with family and friends, half the time alone.

Letter to the Editor

In Monday's Dillonite Daily, the ever-opinionated MJ shared her thoughts on the appropriateness of breast feeding an infant in public. She folds her arguments quaintly into the idea that she is old-fashioned. She also seems to think that the mother doing the breast feeding should take the feelings of those around her more into consideration than the needs of her own child. Finally, MJ leaves us with the question: What happened to the "morals" and "principles" of right and wrong behavior?

I'll get to that last question in a minute, but I would like to offer some suggestions to MJ: First, you did not need to be at this meeting. If you think Dillon needs to read what you have to say about anything, your own ego could use a serious check; you could have left the meeting and NO ONE would have missed this column. Second, the options you presented as alternatives to this woman may not have been possible. This woman may have actually needed to be at the meeting and had no other alternative but to provide her child with the free food that her own body produces. Thirdly, I won't go into it here, but you should educate yourself on the benefits of breast feeding for those women who are able, wherever they are able. Fourthly, I have breast fed at city meetings in the past, in the company of only men, and I can assure you that the business at hand was not derailed by me multi-tasking.

You did get one thing right - nursing can be a very precious moment between mother and child. It is also something that sometimes just needs to be done. Shaming a mother for feeding her child is, in itself, morally reprehensible, and YOU should be ashamed of yourself, not this mother.

Which brings us to your last question about morals and principles: you do realize that there are many people in this country (not a majority; he did not win the popular vote, after all) who voted for someone who bragged to a reporter that he sexually assaulted women whenever he wanted to, right? That the Republican party is currently supporting the election of a pedophile to the US Senate? Breast feeding in public is the opposite of immoral or unprincipled; a mother showing up to a public meeting with her child and taking care of that child at the same time she is fulfilling her civic duty is exactly what this country needs.

Letter to the Editor

Dear MJ

Let me start this rebuttal by addressing the breastfeeding mother mentioned in the previous "PSA." Whoever you are, wherever you are, I want you to know how proud I am of you for feeding your baby. I sincerely hope that ignoramus did not make you feel any shame with his or her ridiculous views on breasts and breastfeeding.

Dear MJ,

Are you now, or have you ever been, a breastfeeding mother? Judging by your letter, I have to say it doesn't sound like you have the first clue about breastfeeding. In response to your remark about, "not so much as a cover:" it is so incredibly difficult to feed with a cover. I know because I am currently a breastfeeding mother. I have to be able to see what I'm doing to help my baby latch, and I hate using a cover. Despite popular misconception it is NOT as easy as, "Whip your boob out and baby eats," and if that's not reason enough to not use one, then I challenge you to eat with your head under a cover and see how much you enjoy it. I know I certainly don't eat with my head under any sort of cover. I only use it when it's cold enough to validate covering the minimally exposed area.

Now let me address some of your more problematic, "suggestions." You recommended that this mother bring a bottle. I don't know if you know this, but bottles pose many problems for breastfeeding babies: nipple confusion, some babies flat out refuse to take any sort of bottle, colic, gassiness, overeating if the bottle feeder does not know the pace-fed technique... Not to mention the hassle that is proper temperature storage. Really, the list goes on.

Let us discuss the, "leave the baby in the care of a loved one?" Well, that's a pretty big assumption that said mother has a loved one who can care for the baby. Do you know this mother? Do you know her family? Are you sure she had other options? As a new Mom I debate heavily how necessary it is for me to take my baby with me, because toting a baby around is quite frankly, a giant hassle.

You called your views, "old school," but truth be told you must not know very much about the history of breastfeeding. Breastfeeding in public, without a cover, even during Puritanical times was commonplace before the invention and widespread use of formula. Why? Because, NEWS FLASH: breasts were made for, yup, you guessed it, BREASTFEEDING. There are even painted portraits of well-off women breastfeeding their babes. It is totally natural, and it's just a breast. If you really have such a problem with them, DON'T LOOK. It's really very simple. The energy it would have taken you to avert your eyes is far less than the massive waste of energy and paper it was to type up and print your horrendous views on breastfeeding in public.

Lastly, Dear MJ, was it really necessary to PUBLICLY call out a mother you likely know nothing more about than the fact she breastfeeds, and try to shame her with your shy views of breastfeeding? I think not... You should probably find a better use of your time. Honestly, you really can't see that much breast when a baby is feeding. I've seen more breast in commercials selling cheeseburgers.

The only lack of morals I saw from this situation was your need to publicly shame a woman who just making sure her baby didn't starve.

Sincerely,

A Breastfeeding Mother (Breanna Belgarde)
