Beaverhead River Flushing Flow 04/19-04/22/2018

The East Bench Unit Joint Board, U.S. Bureau of Reclamation (Reclamation), and Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks (FWP) will release a flow regime from Clark Canyon Reservoir between April 19th and April 22nd to mobilize fine sediment deposited into the Beaverhead River by Clark Canyon Creek, improve river health, and avoid encroachment into the reservoir's regulatory flood pool. Beaverhead River discharges will increase from overwinter releases (75 cfs) to about 600 cfs on April 19th and will be maintained near that level until reservoir elevation is below 5546.1 feet and the flood pool is emptied. Following evacuation of the flood pool it is expected that reservoir releases will approximately match inflows until the onset of irrigation releases.

Clark Canyon Creek is the first major tributary to the Beaverhead River downstream of Clark Canyon Reservoir. Clark Canyon Creek enters a very robust tailwater fishery; the Beaverhead River typically supports 1,000 to 3,000 trout per mile in this reach and provides one of Montana's premier trophy fisheries. Up to 48,000 days and $21 million dollars are spent by anglers on the Beaverhead River each year, making the viability of this fishery of high importance locally and statewide. Periodic sediment loading from Clark Canyon Creek has had a severe negative affect on this fishery. The problem has been most pronounced when accelerated sediment delivery from Clark Canyon Reservoir and sediment loads delivered by the creek exceed transport capacities in the Beaverhead River. These sediment events can result in extensive deposition of fine sediment over several miles of the Beaverhead River and cause a severe decline in the fish population; trout abundances are typically reduced by greater than 50% following large sediment events. However, sediment accumulated through time persists in the river and, if flows are gradually increased at the onset of irrigation season, can be re-mobilized and transported down the channel relatively slowly causing further harm.

The large reductions in trout abundances and reoccurring nature of these sediment events resulted in numerous concerned citizens, angling groups, and outfitters approaching Beaverhead Watershed Committee (BWC) to help find a solution to this problem. The BWC coordinated several studies to determine the cause of sediment events and the type of flushing flow that would mobilize deposited sediment. Mass failures of the naturally highly erosive volcanic ash geology in the North Fork of Clark Canyon Creek are the primary sediment source. Sediment events are stochastic in nature and are typically associated with rain on snow events or localized thunderstorms; average conditions do not produce harmful sediment loading. When the fine-grained volcanic rocks in this sub-basin become saturated by storm events their inherent instability and steep hill slopes result in massive production of sediment that is rapidly transported to the Beaverhead River. Studies indicated that flows of 600 cfs, which would consume about 2100 acre-feet, were needed to mobilize sediment in the Beaverhead River. More information about the sediment studies done on the Beaverhead River are available on the BWC website (<http://www.beaverheadwatershed.org/>).

Beginning in the winter of 2013-2014 the East Bench Unit Joint Board, Reclamation, and FWP agreed to annually store 2100 acre-feet of water in Clark Canyon Reservoir to provide a flushing flow if a Clark Canyon Creek sediment event occurred. The 2,100 acre feet was stored by reducing non-irrigation releases from the reservoir by approximately 5 cfs for the duration of the non-irrigation season. In the occurrence of a sediment event the stored water would be delivered to mobilize and flush it from the upper Beaverhead River and re-deposit it in the floodplain or channel margins to minimize detrimental effects to the fishery. The first flushing flow was released in 2017 and, because of its effectiveness and benefits to river health, an additional 2100 acre-feet was stored to provide a "spring pulse" once reservoir releases are increased from overwinter levels in 2018.

Senate Hopeful Visits Dillon

Judge Russ Fagg was in Dillon to meet people and introduce himself. He is running for the U.S. Senate because he is dissatisfied with the direction the country is going and he doesn't think that Senator Tester votes the way main street Montana do.

Russ Fagg is a fourth-generation Montanan who lives in Billings with his wife of 26 years, Karen Barclay who was from Anaconda. Russ and Karen have twins, Harrison and Barclay, who are both sophomores in college at this time.

Russ is a republican legislator and has been a district court judge for 22 years. He has over 70 people that have served on the legislature that are supporting him. He also has support from Governor Marc Racicot, Governor Stan Stephens, the late Governor Judy Martz, Congressman Rick Hill, Congressman Denny Rehberg and Phyllis Burns. The strong Montana endorsements have helped him raise over a million dollars for his campaign with 76% coming from Montanans.

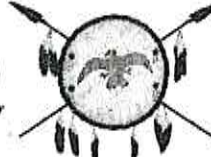

Russ says he has seen the dangers facing Montana families and the need for good paying jobs. He thinks that our number one natural resource in Montana is our young people that are leaving the state. We need to keep them here and have jobs to support them and their families. He thinks we need to develop our other resources including timber, minerals and coal and he thinks we can do that and still protect the environment.

Russ believes we need economic prosperity to continue the American Dream for the next generation. He has dedicated his life to serving Montana and as an experienced leader he hopes to fight for Montanans in Washington. He has stepped down from the bench and is running with the promise of Jobs First and Montana Always.

"Bag And Box Theatre" Performances As Part Of The Bank Of Commerce Performing Arts Series

Article by Alanis Stallknecht. The University of Montana Western's Fine Art's Department presents its final productions of the year for its Bank of Commerce Performing Art Series. Two different shows are being prepared under the concept of "Bag and Box Theatre."

The "Bag and Box" concept is that theatrically, the play is simply done. Actors wear t-shirts and jeans, draw a hat or a prop out of a box, and "become" their character with just a few items, and with a lot of the audience's imagination.

Dr. Judy Ulrich, Fine Arts and Education Professor at the University of Montana Western for the past 30 years, will be directing "Tales from Tom Sawyer" on April 26, 27, and 28 at 3:30 p.m. in the small auditorium on the University of Montana Western campus. For Thursday's performance, the start-time of the play will be delayed to give school children a chance to arrive in time.

Assisting her in directing will be Rob Holter, a visiting artist and instructor, and the play will be performed by Holter's "Introduction to Theatre" class of twenty-five students.

Drama student Brandon Hunter will also be directing his first university show, "Scenes, Small Plays and Improvisation" on April 26, 27, and 28 at 7:30 p.m. in the small auditorium on the University of Montana Western campus.

Hunter, a business major, has cast and crewed a group of 10 students who then created three, 10-minute plays. Following the plays, there will be improv games with audience participation and prizes. This show is recommended for adults only due to language and mature themes.

The University of Montana Western's Fine Arts Department will also be offering school group matinees for "Tales from Tom Sawyer" on Thursday, April 26 and Friday, April 27 at 9:30 a.m.

Bag and Box Theatre,
April 26-28, 2018,
at the UMW campus

"Tales from Tom Sawyer" is free for children five and older accompanied by an adult. The show's start time will be delayed until all school children are able to arrive after school dismissal on Thursday, April 26.

Individual tickets are $8 and Montana Western students are admitted free of charge. Please email judy.ulrich@umwestern.edu for reservations and more information or call 660-0221.

The shows are made possible by generous funding from ASUMW/ Student Senate.
