LAST SWING

This Friday, July 13th the existing playground equipment from Jaycee park will be removed. If you would like, stop by to swing one last time on the old equipment by Thursday night before it is taken out. If you would like to donate to the new park renovation you can stop in Womack's Printing, 126 N. Montana St. for forms or to pay with cash, check or card.

The new playground will have several new children's swings, two tot swings, a therapeutic swing and family team swing.

The City will take the swings and as much of the hardware as they can use for other locations, but the frame will not be used.

Heron Valley are an energetic, young folk band from Scotland who have serious enthusiasm for the music they play. Their roots lie in Scottish and Irish traditional music, while taking influence from various Folk, Country and Bluegrass styles.

This is their first time in the states, and Dillon, Montana is their very first stop.

Attorney General Fox Issues Statement on Supreme Court Nomination

Montana Attorney General Tim Fox issued the following statement Monday on President Trump's nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court of the United States:

"President Trump made an excellent decision. Judge Kavanaugh is a brilliant jurist with a proven record of objectively interpreting laws and the Constitution. I urge the United States Senate to give this nomination adequate consideration, followed by swift confirmation."

SPIRIT RIDE COMING THROUGH LOOKS BACK TO THE PONY EXPRESS

While there may be little in common between the Spirit Ride and the Pony Express, both ventures do share some common dynamics.

The Pony Express was a private venture created to serve the need of delivering the mail to a population center that had mushroomed overnight with the Gold Rush of 1849. By 1860 there was a dire need for faster communication, particularly between San Francisco and the East. The Pony Express succeeded in reducing mail transport by ten days. The Spirit Ride neither has a profit motive nor is about speed or transporting mail, though it is about accelerating public awareness of the Slow Down, Move-Over Law and carrying that message cross country. Too many motorists either ignore the law or are unaware of it. According to the National Safety Commission 71% of Americans have not heard of this law. Meanwhile, there are hundreds of casualties each year among first responders and over 100 fatalities, 60% of them towers, struck by passing vehicles.

Pony Express Riders sometimes feared being struck by arrows as they rode swiftly to make good time, the average ride about 75 miles, swapping horses every ten miles, then relaying their mail bag to the next rider in an exchange that barely made time for hello and goodbye. The Spirit Rider will ride an hour or two, and some will ride several hours, to relay the Spirit Casket to the next towman and carrier bed. Perhaps in the relay these Riders have something in common, if 150 years apart.

The dedication of the Pony Express Riders and the Spirit Riders are based on different motivations. The Pony Express Riders were paid three times the wage of an unskilled laborer at the time; and though not a lucrative amount, he was paid. The Spirit Rider is a volunteer, motivated by heart and the experiences of running an operation fraught with risk and peril. Maybe one of his drivers was struck and killed working a breakdown, or one of his competitors lost a driver that way, to say nothing of the countless injuries he's aware drivers have suffered out there. To the Rider, the special casket he carries represents the spirit of the towers who paid the ultimate sacrifice; a precious cargo indeed.

The Pony Express Rider took a loyalty oath to good behavior before he could join this exclusive corps. The Spirit Rider's oath to deliver his charge safely is implicit with his understanding of what he transports.

There were nearly 200 relief stations from Missouri through to California where the Riders either swapped horses or fell back to let a fresh man take the bags from there. There are over 300 relay points around the country for the Spirit Ride.

The Pony Express came to an abrupt halt one and a half years after it began when the telegraph lines were strung up across the country. The Spirit Ride will have run the same length of time before it finds a home in a museum as a work of art. The design includes a dozen hand-painted images of towers and first responders at work by one of the towing industry's renowned wrecker artists, Cecil Burrowes.

The Pony Express was about efficiency but could not turn a profit in its short life span. Perhaps if the telegraph lines had come a decade or two later it might have. The Spirit Ride is a non-profit venture founded by American Towman Magazine and B/A Products as a non-profit project, found online at atspiritride.com.

While both Rides came from different kinds of purpose, both will go down in the annals of history as shortlived but admirable in their energetic vision. The Pony Express succeeded in significantly improving communications for the young nation. The Spirit Ride hopes to do the same for an industry born with the automobile. The Spirit Ride is on a crusade to save lives. The mail carrying venture wanted a long life no doubt. The Spirit Ride is destined to be like a shooting star; brief but perhaps magnificent in its effect.

Have You Made These Blunders On A First Date?

Tyrades! by Danny Tyree

I have done the math. I'm neither bragging nor complaining - just stating the facts: including my initial meeting with my wife, I've gone on precisely SIX first dates in my entire lifetime.

World-weary serial daters may be aghast at that limited number, but it does have its advantages. If anyone ever invents a time machine, maybe "kill baby Hitler" and "stop Lee Harvey Oswald" will still rank ahead of "carry a can of Mace for that geeky guy whose clothes don't match" as urgent projects.

I'm taking stock of my past pursuit of maidens fair because Great Britain's Daily Mail Online website recently carried a story titled "What not to say on a first date: singles reveal the VERY candid revelations that sent potential partners running for the hills."

Yes, single parenthood, criminal records, messy finances, sports rivalries, political prejudices, medical issues, lingering affection for an ex-lover, egotism, clinginess and other factors can end a romance before it even begins. Young or old, male or female, gay or straight, divorced/widowed or never married, the danger of bad first impressions remains.

Although traditionalists steadfastly assert, "Honesty is the best policy," and although social-media-savvy singles can find countless romantic pointers, there is still a danger of getting nervous or overconfident and divulging too much information.

My inside sources have supplied a few of the dating bloopers that didn't make it into the Daily Mail article:

- "Kids eat free? Here, I knew this bib and pacifier would come in handy someday. And fill your diaper with ketchup packets..."
 - "I have a very positive outlook on the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune. When life gives you restraining orders, make lemonade."
 - "My boss is such a clueless old tyrant. Hey, did you know you look an awful lot like the girl in the framed photo on his desk?"
 - "You've written a book on 14th century Tibetan economics? Fascinating! Aw, do I have to READ this fortune cookie? Can't I just wait for the viral video to come out?"
 - "I firmly believe a woman can do anything a man can do - and hopefully, both of them will be willing to do it for substandard wages."
 - "Pleased to meet you. I've been waiting a long time to tell you I think it's cute the way you misspelled the word 'creepy' in your diary."
 - "Where do I see myself in 10 years? Chuckle That's an easy one - because the mother ship is coming to fetch me in NINE years."
 - "I'm glad you brought me to this heavy metal concert, but I can't hear the music over the ticking of my BIOLOGICAL CLOCK."
 - "I'm not worried about rock climbing on our first date. If I fall down, my mommy will kiss it and make it feel all better."
 - "I need to make a quick stop at the store. The feds are springing for WITNESS protection, not STD protection."
- It seems like only yesterday that I was venturing out there and risking rejection. Soon, my teenage son Gideon will enter the dating world.

My teenage son Gideon, who has always dreamed of building a TIME MACHINE. Perhaps he'll invent one in time to correct any dating mistakes he makes.

"I was just joking about YOU wearing the bib and pacifier. Here, we'll put it on baby Churchill. Ask if they have complimentary cigars for the diaper..."
