Prospects for Reducing Rush-Hour Traffic 'Dim'

By Joe Guzzardi

Summer is half over which means that many people have taken their traditional driving vacation, and likely encountered oppressive traffic. But even for those whose road trips have just been to the local supermarket this summer, odds are excellent that drivers have encountered mind-boggling, frustrating traffic jams.

Road construction, off-ramp closures and more drivers on the roads have slowed traffic to the point where the prudent motorist adds a 50 percent variable to his travel time - the trip that used to take 30 minutes may now takes at least 45 minutes, and maybe even an hour, and that doesn't include driving in circles looking for parking.

Sometimes there flat out just isn't any parking. At Yosemite National Park, tourists pay a $30 entrance fee, then endure traffic jams, honking horns, delays of up to three hours as they search, often in vain, for a parking space - hardly the vacation they had in mind. Park officials report that road rage and accidents at Yosemite are up.

In Colorado, traffic congestion has driven residents out of the state to which they moved seeking a more tranquil way of life. On their way out of the state, Coloradoans bemoan how overpopulation has wrecked the Rocky Mountain vista, destroyed the once pristine rivers and plowed under productive farmland.

And in middle Tennessee, as 30,000 new residents move into the area each year, the traffic is described as nightmarish, and the cause of a sharp increase in automobile accidents during the last five years. Nashville along with other urban sprawl-effected metropolises like Oklahoma City; Birmingham, Ala.; Richmond, Va., and Raleigh, N.C. are, to the surprise of many, among the most congested, while San Francisco, Los Angeles, Houston and Atlanta are further down the list.

Local legislators in Tennessee have embarked on a costly but Pollyannaish $8.6 billion, 25-year plan that they hope will alleviate congestion. However, the harsh reality is that no transportation plan can successfully accommodate perpetual growth. The same failure in logic applies nationwide and is reflected in federal immigration policy. According to U.S. Census Bureau data, during 2014 and 2015, 3.1 million legal and illegal immigrants settled in the United States, a 39 percent increase over the two prior years.

Immigration is - and has been for years - an explosive, toxic domestic political hot potato. But it's indisputable that immigration is the major population growth accelerant. Immigration, births to immigrants and lawful permanent residents that petition for their family to join them will push the U.S. population from 328 million today to an estimated 438 million by 2050.

Those millions of new arrivals will need transportation. In its research report on traffic, the Brookings Institute wrote that America's vehicle population has been increasing even faster than its human population. From 1980 to 2000, 1.2 more automotive vehicles were added to the vehicle population of the U.S. for every 1 person added to the human population. Brookings concluded that because of increases in cars and the number of drivers, "prospects for reducing peak-hour traffic congestion in the future are dim indeed."

Disappointingly, Brookings didn't mention the immigration variable. Immigration levels aren't set in stone, and Congress can and should adjust them to minimize even more overcrowding. Although immigration at its existing rate is diminishing the qualify of life for most average Americans, lowering the total number of immigrants has been a non-starter in Congress to date.

Montana Elections And The Russians

by Montana Secretary of State Corey Stapleton

My graduating class from the United States Naval Academy was known as the "Top Gun" class, because our applications for appointment to Annapolis were greatly influenced by the blockbuster movie featuring Tom Cruise and Kelly McGillis. In that thriller movie, the confrontation between the U.S.S.R. versus U.S.A. was classic Cold War. In today's words: Russia vs 'Merica.

In the thirty years since the end of the Cold War, I've always kept an eye on Russia. Anyone who has studied Russian history knows that they are a very proud people, a strong nation with borders which have frequently moved as their power has ebbed and flowed over the centuries. Losing the Cold War to the United States was painful both politically and economically for the Russians. I'm sure they didn't 'move on' from defeat as quickly as Americans moved on after the Berlin wall fell my sophomore year at the Academy.

Four years ago, Russia successfully stole a huge piece of real estate called the Crimean peninsula from neighboring Ukraine. The rest of the world watched helplessly. There is something to be learned from both the Crimean annexation in 2014 and the 2016 Russian interference with U.S. elections.

Russia always plays chess

The average American doesn't really have to pay attention to foreign affairs. We are the most powerful country in the world, we are geographically isolated, and domestic issues dominate our media. Only the most provocative worldly events catch our attention. Thank goodness we have an incredibly capable intelligence community. They know we can't play checkers when our opponents are playing chess. If you study the chaotic (orchestrated?) events that led up to invasion and annexation of Crimea, you realize that Russia is exceptional at political disruption, technological attacks, coordinated strikes, patience, and classic denial.

It isn't surprising that a dozen Russian intelligence agents were recently indicted for messing with our 2016 national elections. That's what they do! Debates about whether Russia likes to meddle with other countries' internal operations aren't very helpful. We know that Russia seeks and exploits many international vulnerabilities—not just in the United States. What is helpful, however, is going through a state and national process of updating and analyzing threats to our elections infrastructure. I guess you could say we can thank the Russians for that.

Threats and Opportunities

Russia used our own creative capitalism against us in 2016. Facebook is the leader of a new medium called social media, and the rapid expansion of Facebook's influence over voters had mostly been featured in dollars used for advocacy of candidates or issues. Russian operatives were able to exploit this new frontier of cyber persuasion, and coupled with traditional hacking, targeted large blocs of American voters with negative persuasion ads.

Additionally, almost half the states (including Montana) were scanned for weaknesses in our elections systems. While no votes were changed by the Russians in our 2016 election cycle, there was a clear and significant threat to our nation's ability to conduct fair elections.

In Montana, improving the integrity and security of our elections has been my administration's top priority. We are partnering with the Department of Homeland Security, Montana Department of Justice, Governor's office, and the National Guard in a variety of projects to test, train, and update security protocols both at the state and county levels. We have invested in two-factor authentication for our 56 counties. We're procuring new Information Technology (IT) systems and hardware. We completed a first-ever Mail Ballot Improvement Project in 2017 that provided valuable insight to mismatched signatures on ballots, and as a result, for the first time ever the Commissioner of Political Practices, the county Election Administrators, and the Office of the Secretary of State will be communicating and working together to resolve mail ballot signatures that can't be reconciled after an election.

Ongoing Concerns

I have four concerns regarding security and our Elections. One, I'm worried that our rapid move towards elections collaboration with the federal government could eventually lead towards the nationalization of our elections. (Dept. of Homeland Security designated Elections as "critical infrastructure" for the first time ever in 2016).

Two, I worry about short-sighted arguments of saving money on elections by eliminating witnesses, judges, and physical polling locations. (Montana polling location elections are more accurate and secure currently than mailed absentee ballots).

Three, I'm concerned with IT trends that market new online and digital solutions for elections. (Think: Russian hacking).

And lastly, I worry about the consistency of our Office and the 56 counties' personnel training and capabilities in the face of potential attacks from a nation-state like Russia. We have to be continuously vigilant as a group, in order to be best-prepared for a cyber event against our election system. It's not going to be easy and it's not going to be cheap. But, as I've said before, we are not here to run the cheapest elections—we're here to run the best elections! And that's what we're going to do.

Buck & Cheryl Decker "Fun" Raiser

There will be a "Fun" Raiser for the Decker's (who lost their home to a fire), on Tuesday, August 14th. The event will take place at the Elks Lodge. If you would like to be involved, donate items for raffles / auction, or money please contact Laurie Blinn (406) 491-2704, Kate Allder (406) 684-5139, Karen Ward (814) 769-6994, or Sara Decker (406) 596-7658.

Slow Down and be Cautious

The building of the playground and the splash pad at Jaycee Park is officially underway. A big thank you to all who have contributed in any way to make this happen

There will be plenty of construction going on in this area for the next month and the City of Dillon would like to remind everyone to slow down and be cautious when driving or walking in this area.

If you have any questions please contact Todd Hazelbaker, Director of Operations, at 683-4245.
