"Beaverhead in Color"

F. Lee Graves photography exhibit, "Beaverhead in Color", at ArtSpace in Dillon, 120 N, Montana St. opens with a reception from 12:30 to 3 pm on Sunday, March 3rd. Graves, a native son of a pioneering family that settled in Bannack in 1864, returned to his childhood home after living in Florida. Photography has been his passion for 40 years and returning to his childhood home opened a floodgate of inspiration for his artwork. He is the author of two books, Montana's Fur Trade Era and Bannack: Cradle of Montana, both of which contain his photographs. He is a member of the Beaverhead County Museum Board of Trustees and is active in the Dillon Masonic Lodge and Shriners.

Graves enjoys both the minute and obvious patterns that make up Montana's scenic and historic presence along with the plants, birds and wildlife waiting to be framed by his camera. He hopes his work raises awareness of Montana's fragile ecology and the need to protect it for future generations. He loves the "surprises" that are easy to overlook and the enjoyment of sharing those fleeting moments with others through his chosen art form.

The reception opening the Graves exhibit will include the opportunity to view some of the family artifacts from the Graves family history along with light refreshments and the opportunity to visit with the photographer/author.

LATER RETIREMENT

Please join the City of Dillon to show appreciation for the many years of service that Rick Later has served our community as the fire marshal and as a volunteer fighter. We will be hosting a party from 2:00-5:00, March 6, 2019 in the Council Chambers. Refreshments and snacks will be served.

RMEF Lauds Passage of Natural Resources Management Act

The Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation strongly supports congressional action resulting in the passage of the Natural Resources Management Act (S. 47) which includes permanent reauthorization of the Land and Water Conservation Fund (LWCF).

The House voted in favor of the proposal 363-62 just two weeks after the Senate approved the measure 92-8.

"We wish to thank Congress for acting in a positive and timely manner in getting this done," said Kyle Weaver, RMEF president and CEO. "This important legislation permanently reauthorizes LWCF—the nation's most important land conservation tool that expired in 2015. We now call on President Trump to sign it into law. Once that happens, LWCF will become a regular part of the appropriations process and will be available to help RMEF and other organizations continue to conserve wildlife habitat and secure access to public lands."

Established in 1964, LWCF directs lawmakers to appropriate up to $900 million annually from federal offshore drilling fees for the protection of important land, water and recreational areas for Americans to enjoy.

"This program is absolutely vital for elk, other wildlife and hunting access," said Blake Henning, RMEF chief conservation officer. "The bill further improves public access to public lands by directing federal agencies to open lands for hunting, fishing and recreational shooting unless specifically closed. It also contains a number of other vital conservation measures."

RMEF consistently advocated in favor of LWCF permanent reauthorization for years.

As of early September 2018, LWCF provided more than $108 million in funding that assisted 80 different RMEF land projects that permanently protected more than 152,000 acres of wildlife habitat.

Key facets of the Natural Resources Management Act include:

- Permanent reauthorization of LWCF with 3 percent or $15 million of annual appropriations made available for the purpose of securing additional access for hunting, fishing, recreational shooting and other outdoor-related activities.
- Authorizing the transportation of archery equipment through National Park Service (NPS) units.

Do You Deserve the Right to Repair Your Electronics?

Tyrades! by Danny Tyree

Remember the good ol' days of shade tree mechanics, denim patches and Emmett's Fix-It Shop on "Mayberry R.F.D."?

The growing complexity and fragility of high-tech consumer products (smartphones, tablets, video game consoles, microwave ovens, tractors, etc.) has threatened such a thrifty lifestyle; but some activists claim that even more damage has been done by the high-pressure tactics of the "either ship it to us for repair or just toss it in the landfill and buy a new one" manufacturers of those items.

These companies are not above issuing cease-and-desist orders when an intrepid tinkerer reverse-engineers a product and posts repair tips online, or even remotely shutting down a product that contains unauthorized replacement parts.

It's a wonder that even more companies haven't jumped aboard the greed train. I could just see the Ketchup Police kicking the front door open and catching penny-pinching miscreants with a nearly empty ketchup bottle turned upside down. ("Yeah, I'm a Ketchup Policeman. My parents met when Mom was rounding up hooligans who put aluminum foil on their rabbit-ear antennas, and Dad was cuffing scofflaws who used pliers to change channels.")

Six years ago, a group of concerned consumers, recyclers, refurbishers, environmentalists, digital-rights advocates and repair specialists joined forces to found Repair.org, a group working to ensure that when something breaks, consumers can readily find the information and parts they need to repair it, or else have it fixed by a repairman of their choice.

Things used to be built to last. After Granny Tyree's wringer washer gave up the ghost, the tub served for years as a livestock feed storage container. Now it seems we're trapped in a community theater production of "Annie Get Your Gun." ("Anything you can build, I can build crappier. I can build anything crappier than you...")

It gets really embarrassing when a reporter doing a story about a local citizen's restored '57 Chevy has to haul out his 14th digital camera to document the accomplishment.

I understand how corporations can get all clingy about their "proprietary information." I mean, I do affix a copyright notice to these columns. But I am resigned to the fact that editors can completely change my headlines, force my freewheeling punctuation to adhere more to the "Associated Press Style Book" and truncate my contact information. Readers are entitled to take my words out of context, cross out paragraphs they disagree with or line the birdcage with my prose.

And my 401(k) account probably has stock in such companies, but even a capitalist can implore fat cats to rein it in a little. Give enough ammo to the socialists and Uncle Sam will nationalize Hewlett-Packard, guaranteeing unlimited ink cartridges for Printers That Don't Want To Work.

I know manufacturers fear lawsuits if amateurs fiddle with repairs and make matters worse, but probably the computer with the judge's ruling would crash and lose it, anyway.("Never send a five-year-old to do a six-year-old's assembly job!")

By the end of 2018, legislatures in 18 states were considering "right to repair" laws. But an even bigger impact could come from Divine Intervention.

Imagine if God visited a few ailing executives and held them to their own standards.

"Knee replacement? I don't recall authorizing a knee replacement. And were you born with stents? How about I unleash a plague of genuine, brand-name locusts on your market valuation?"
