Leroy James Owen

A stirring adventure comes to an end.
On Monday, April 29, 2019, Leroy James Owen—patriot, veteran, Christian, beloved father and true friend, died peacefully at the age of 87 in the Salt Lake City home of his daughter and son-in-law, Jim and Donna Poulton.

Leroy was born on September 21,
1931, in Dillon, Montana — growing up
Great Depression tough in Armstead, the largest cattle shipping point on the Union Pacific railroad. He raised a lot of hell as a young man, including setting fire to the skirt of a beautiful BCHS co-ed named Claire Marchesseault. She was so offended that she later accepted his marriage proposal.

Leroy was preceded in death by his second wife, Gretta
- father, Alvin - mother, Lois - brother, Bennett - nephew, Glen and beloved pets including Norman and Baby. He is survived by his first wife, Claire, children, Donna and Bennett, step-daughter Patricia Irene Fleischman, two grandchildren, Christopher and Eva Owen, daughters-in-law Barbara Owen and Sabine Baerwolff, and a nephew and nieces. We are most grateful to Rocky Mountain Hospice in Salt Lake City for their compassion and care.

A funeral service will be held at Christ the King Catholic Church in Milwaukie, Oregon on May 17, 2019, with the Rosary at 10:30 am and the Funeral Mass at 11:00 am. Graveside services with military honors will be held at Gethsemani Catholic Cemetery at 12:30 pm. A reception will follow, location to be announced.
In lieu of sending flowers—plant flowers—that will make Leroy happy.

A Civilized Cowboy

By: Bryce Angell

I've slept in tents, too many nights, on cots and sleeping bags. Those doggone bags were so well worn we called 'em bed down rags. And when you're young it doesn't seem to matter where you sleep.

Those forty winks come easy having never counted sheep. But age has made its nasty mark. I've softened up a bit.

I'd have to say that sleeping bags, for me, are plumb unfit. So when it comes to camping and it's time to hit the sack. I hope to find an answer to the sleeping bag attack.

That's when my good friend Peter said, "I bought a brand new rig.

It's more than just a trailer and I'm telling you it's big!

"It has all the amenities with fridge to keep us fed.

A shower stall and most of all a place to lay your head.

"Each horse has its own private spot. They'll ride back in the rear.

There's storage room along each side to pack in all our gear."

I almost felt a sense of guilt. Had I become a dude? But the first time with the trailer caused my life to be renewed.

We saddled up our horses. They were anxious for a ride.

We made it back at dark and let me tell you I was fried.

We microwaved our dinner. From the fridge came berry pie.

Then, we sat around the campfire, as the evening's end was nigh.

A long hot shower did the trick before we hit the hay.

I'd have to say the shower was the best part of my day.

Each cowboy pulled his covers as he slipped into his bed.

The lights were out in just a few. I slept like I was dead.

Tell me, am I too civilized? That's what some folks might say.

Alas this aging cowboy has found a better way.

Rebekah Levine Publishes Research with the Nature Conservancy

Montana Western Assistant Professor Rebekah Levine recently published her collaborative research with the Nature Conservancy in the publication "Earth and Space News."

Rebekah Levine, geomorphologist and assistant professor in the Environmental Sciences Department at Montana Western, collaborated on a watershed research project with the Nature Conservancy. Their joint research was published in "Earth and Space News," a publication by the American Geophysical Union (AGU).

Levine began her research on winter snowfall in 2012 with a goal to discover a way to use snowfall patterns to predict dry conditions later on in the season. Levine was approached by the Nature Conservancy, a non-profit organization, to classify watersheds in a way that would allow the agency to make more effective and economically viable conservation choices.

The research was conducted mainly in Beaverhead County, Mont. and also included parts of Madison and Gallatin counties and Yellowstone National Park. Levine looked at areas with low incoming sunlight during the spring and summer to begin her research. From there, she narrowed the sites down to areas that were higher than 2,400 meters (about 7,874 feet) in elevation and that received most precipitation in the form of snow.

Levine compiled all the data she gathered onto a map and documented areas most likely to have late season snow pack. After five years of research and data collection, the map serves as a predictive model of the streams in Southwest Montana that continue late season flow.

"There are a lot of different potential applications for this research," Levine said.

Levine presented her research in December 2018 during an AGU meeting in Washington D.C. The next step was for the research to be formally peer reviewed and published.

Another example of Levine's collaborative research efforts was with UMW Biology Professor, Michelle Anderson. This research project, which focused on linking beaver dam affected flow dynamics to the upstream passage of Arctic grayling, was published in October 2018 in "Ecology and Evolution," a peer-reviewed journal.

In addition to conducting research and writing, one of the courses Levine taught this year at Montana Western was titled "Environmental Science Research and Writing." The 200-level class is a graduation requirement for all environmental science majors.

At Montana Western, students take one course at a time for 18 days before moving on to the next course, which allows students to be fully immersed in their education. This unique educational model is called Experience One.

"It was a great class for me to teach, especially since I was in the process of writing a scientific paper at the same time," Levine said.

The course looked at methods for effectively communicating scientific data, concepts and research. It also introduced students to grant writing, resume preparation and included one-on-one meetings with Levine, followed by students in the course reviewing the work of their fellow classmates.

Join us for a special evening with famed wilderness defender, author and passionate grizzly advocate Doug Peacock. We'll see Grizzly Country, an 11-minute film about Doug and his long relationship with Yellowstone grizzlies, hear how the bears helped to save his life, and learn his thoughts on the best way to coexist with this feared but vulnerable American icon. Doug served as the model for environmentalist George Hayduke in Edward Abbey's novel The Monkey Wrench Gang.

Keeping your whole family healthy

In response to the overwhelming need from the Dillon community, Southwest Montana Community Health Center is moving forward in establishing a pharmacy in the old Mitchell Drug building at 125 E. Glendale.

"We are very excited for the opportunity to expand our retail pharmacy" services into the Dillon Community. Our staff is dedicated to providing personalized service at an affordable price, as we have in our communities for nearly 20 years," said Tammy Cox, director of pharmacy services for the SWMTCHC.

The pharmacy is expected to open in summer 2019, following a remodel of the building.

In the meantime, CHC pharmacies in Sheridan and Butte are available to assist with medication needs. Call Mac's CHC Pharmacy at (406) 842-7434 or Butte CHC Pharmacy at (406) 496-6001 to discuss options to obtain your prescriptions.

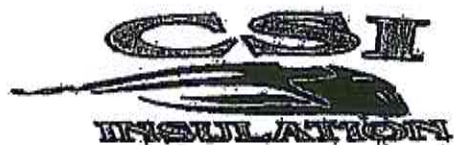

If you need a medical provider, now is the time to establish at our clinic by calling (406) 683-4440 for an appointment.
