The most important things in Bob's life were his wife, children, family and God. These were his true treasures and his true love. He lived according to these priorities.

"Artist Wilderness Connection"

Art Exhibition at Beaverhead Brewing Company

Opening reception: 5:00 - 8:00, June 26th, 2019

Ted Hansen will be debuting a new collection of his artworks on June 26th at Beaverhead Brewing. The work will be on display through Labor Day. Originally from Dillon and now living in Minneapolis, Minnesota, Hansen was one of two artists selected for an artist in residency program called "Artist Wilderness Connection" in the Great Bear and Bob Marshall Wilderness in 2018. The residency is made possible by a partnership between the Flathead National Forest, the Hockaday Museum of Art in Kalispell, the Bob Marshall Wilderness Foundation, and Swan Valley Connections. Each year the program provides the opportunity for artists to reside in a ranger station in the wilderness and create works inspired by the experience. The work in the exhibition was inspired by his two week stay at the Spruce Park ranger cabin on the Middle Fork of the Flathead. Some of the works are also inspired by a 212 mile through hike of the Bob Marshall Wilderness complex that he and his wife completed in 2015.

In addition to creating several new works inspired by the wilderness, Hansen also developed an educational curriculum inspired by his experience that uses nature journaling and collaborative artworks to help students deeply understand their sense of place. He has taught the curriculum to several teachers and students in both Montana and Minnesota.

Hansen will be present for the opening and will give a short talk about the artworks at 7:00.

Do You Live In One of the Fun States?

Tyrades! by Danny Tyree

"You think there's not a lot goin' on/But look closer, baby, you're so wrong..." - from the theme to Canada's brilliant "Corner Gas" TV show.

USA TODAY recently reported personal finance website WalletHub's annual ranking of the most fun states in America.

Using 26 weighted metrics related to entertainment, recreation, nightlife (and those raunchy tattoos that the researchers can't remember getting), WalletHub compiled its admittedly subjective list.

I don't mind acknowledging that California and Florida came out on top in the fun competition; but, unlike WalletHub, I will not be so crass as to shame any of the bottom 10. I have readers in many of those fine states, and I know which side my bread is buttered on. (Personal aside to the readers in those states: Guys, if you'd drop the plans for the Which Side Your Bread Is Buttered On Museum, your ranking would probably rise next year. Just saying.)

Despite the presence of Nashville, Memphis and the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, my own state of Tennessee ranks a lackluster 23rd. It's as if the gravitas of "the Volunteer State" has to give way to the clingier "Me! Me! Over here! Pick me!" state.

Along with assessments of average weather and entertainment affordability, WalletHub's criteria include the number of restaurants, casinos, golf courses, country clubs, gyms, skiing facilities and marinas per capita.

(I've always been skeptical of folks who put too much emphasis on "per capita" statistics. Perhaps it matters with the number of emergency rooms or bilingual court officers, but how many people say things like "Darn it! I'm jealous! Residents of my cousin's state have TWICE as many performance artists per 1,000 harassing them"?)

Some of the "have not" states are cursed by Mother Nature with dreary weather or a scarcity of beaches, but others have only themselves to blame for their unappealing image. Believe it or not, taking whiskey shots only when someone says "antidisestablishmentarianism" is not the stuff of glossy tourism brochures.

It's more than a little sad that the survey leans toward cosmopolitan amusements while neglecting "Friday night lights" high school football games, church carwashes, impromptu tall-tale-swapping matches and other examples of life's simple pleasures.

Yes, some residents of "boring" states heed the siren call of flashier states; but others are happy with the simple way of life. I guarantee no one has ever said, "Let's meet under the bleachers, Janie Belle and - aw, shucks! There's no ski lift! Just forget it."

People looking to pick a vacation spot or a state for relocation certainly pay attention to the WalletHub rankings, but the popular states must be very subtle about exploiting the data.

There could be a lot of blowback from an advertising campaign such as "You'll be swept up by the theme parks, swept up by the dance spots, swept up by the hurricanes" or "Can't you just see yourself chilling out in a state where all the bored people from dozens of OTHER states are congregating? You'll want to put your eyes out - and the used hypodermic needles are super available!"

States, you're all fun in your own way. Don't overthink it. Although, I am intrigued by the promotional stunt percolating in one of the lower-ranking states. ("We're initiating an annual ranking of PERSONAL FINANCE WEBSITES! With the loser to be rolled up in the sidewalks at sundown!")
