Introduce yourself to Europe's best on both sides of the English Channel (or "la Manche"). Survey rich landscapes from the banks of the Thames and the Seine, and measure skyline-shaping domes at St. Paul's Cathedral and Sacré Coeur Basilica. Hometown Artist Returns with Art Show

Sheila Shepherd will be displaying her paint and pencil works at Tendoy Fine Art, 120 N. Montana Street, in Dillon during the month of August. Her show opens on August 4th with a reception between 1 and 3 PM. Shepherd 's niece, Kayla Peacock, is a sustaining member of Tendoy Fine Art and Shepherd is donating her sale proceeds to the gallery.

Shepherd's early art instruction began in Jackson Elementary School. She studied with Darrell Johnson in high School and credits Johnson with inspiring her love of creating art. College instruction included Ben Steele at Eastern Montana College and Jim Corr at the University of Montana, Western. Later, painting in the studio of Mary VonLortz, she was schooled in color perfection.

"I am extremely honored to share my art with the community that I have always called home. Most of the pieces I create reflect Southwestern Montana in one way or another. A perfect example is the oil painting of a Southern California beach wave and two footprints. This was inspired when one of my dear high school friends from Dillon visited San Clemente and had never been to the beach. These are her footprints." says Shepherd.

Shepherd is a mechanical engineer and went to work for Boeing directly out of college. Today she works for a company that sells carbon Fiber to Boeing for aircraft fabrication. She loves the travel and the experiences her career has afforded her. Her artwork primarily focuses on figurative and architectural pieces.

Dollar Stores: Do You Know the Tricks of Shopping There?

Tyrades! by Danny Tyree

"What to buy (and not to buy) at the dollar store," blared the headline for a Washington Post analysis of retail chains such as Dollar Tree and 99 Cents Only.

Although my own experiences have been mostly positive (clean, well-stocked, easily navigated stores with friendly employees), I can understand the need for the Post, Consumer Reports and other periodicals to offer pointers for maximizing the shopping experience.

First, the good news. Dollar stores have been a reliable source of snacks, party supplies, gift bags and toothpaste for my family. I was tickled to find perfectly serviceable reading glasses for my mother at ONE-FIFTH the price I had encountered at other "everyday low prices" stores. I am especially grateful for the name-brand "two for a dollar" greeting cards offered at dollar stores. I had always felt stupid emptying my wallet for "one and done" cards that should really say, "I can't believe you're six years old - and that this bleepin' card cost more than the obstetrician who delivered you."

On the other hand, consumer advocates advise checking the package weight, ingredients and expiration dates on "too good to be true" bargains. The date on processed meat should contain a month and year, not a reference to CARBON-14! And, regardless of the advertised SPF level, you probably won't get much protection from sunscreen with a dusty label proclaiming, "When you run out of children to sacrifice, this offers last-ditch protection against that giant ball of fire in the sky."

Critics warn that "you get what you pay for" and should be willing to shop for high-quality versions of certain items at actual hardware stores. You know the old saying: "When the only tool you have is a dollar hammer, every problem starts to look like the head flying off and coldcocking your spouse."

Cosmetic products may be watered down or contain harsher ingredients than other brands. But in case you're putting on a community theater production of "The Wizard of Oz," can you really pass up spending a buck to have a REALISTIC portrayal of someone with green skin moaning, "I'm melting, I'm melting"?

Toys can be particularly lacking in sturdiness. ("Stop crying over that busted paddle ball or I'll GIVE you something to cry about - a sack of dollar yo-yos!")

Skeptics say some fly-by-night suppliers are lacking in transparency, track record and accountability. On the other hand, the vaunted name-brand manufacturers can afford the best lobbyists and lawyers. ("Battery spewed acid down your esophagus? We have this bunny that just keeps going and going and going... back to court. Don't spend your settlement in one place. Aw, you splurged on gum.")

Dollar stores have been controversial in some communities. They are accused of driving grocery stores out of business and reducing access to fresh food. Tulsa, Oklahoma and other cities have imposed restrictions on the establishments. Because, you know, consumers who would invest a dollar in an extension cord are going to live long enough to reap the health benefits of kale and mangoes.

Finally, no kidding, home pregnancy tests are among the top selling items at dollar stores. Sales really spike after some Lothario stocks up on dollar bottles of wine. Perhaps those Lotharios should toss in an appropriate greeting card. ("I can't believe this wine is six days old - and cost more than my vasectomy.")
