Third and fourth weekends of general hunt marked by warm weather

Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks operated four check stations in Region 3 during the third weekend of the general deer and elk hunt, and three check stations during the fourth weekend. Biologists observed fewer hunters in the field than the same weekends in 2018, as well as reduced harvest.

Much of the drop in activity is likely due to unseasonably warm temperatures in the upper 40s and low 50s. Most of the snow in many areas is gone, except on north-facing slopes in upper elevations. This makes it challenging for hunters to find elk.

Biologists at the Cameron check station checked 278 hunters over Weekend 3, and 298 hunters over Weekend 4. These numbers were below average, but overall hunter success in this area was within the long-term average.

Hunter at the Divide check station were within the long-term average for Weekend 3, but they were 7 percent below average for Weekend 4. Hunter success there over Weekend 3 was 58 percent below the 10-year average.

Community-Driven Conservation is Critical to Montana's Future

Oftentimes, we surround ourselves with perspectives that reinforce our own. Whether it's the news station we prefer or the people we socialize with, it is comforting to hear our views reflected by others. But sometimes making progress requires getting out of our comfort zones.

Having the humility to be willing to listen, to try and understand different perspectives with empathy, and to allow our own beliefs to be challenged is an important part of creating a positive dialogue that can move us forward.

In southwest Montana, the Ruby Valley Strategic Alliance, a collaborative group consisting of ranchers, conservationists, and business owners, is working to do just that.

Members of the Ruby Valley Strategic Alliance came together over land management conflict back in 2013. At the time, we were all operating in narrow silos that fed convictions about our respective "enemies" and their motivations. But spending time with each other made us start seeing one another not as villains but as fellow Montanans. We don't always see eye to eye on every issue, but we all share a strong conservation ethic. The recognition that we share many of the same values has allowed us to move past longstanding conflict and toward durable solutions that advance our shared goal: conserving the lands here in southwest Montana that are important to us all.

Montana has something most states lost long ago - vast, open spaces. Whether you are experiencing it through a tug on the end of your fly line, the view from your tent on a mountainside, or trailing cattle through a pasture, we have a deep connection to this place and a strong desire to ensure that future generations are able to experience this wild country like we do.

This commonality serves as the foundation for working together on keeping both working ranches and public land viable to achieve our long-term conservation goals. Part of that means recognizing that public lands and private lands are intertwined. Ecological systems aren't bound by the lines on a map: cold, clear water flows from the high peaks to the rivers and hay fields below, and wildlife depends on large swaths of private ranchland for winter habitat and movement corridors. To have real discussions about conservation, both private and public land interests need to be sitting around the table.

Over the last few years the people sitting around the table in the Ruby Valley Strategic Alliance have addressed some of the most controversial subjects in Montana—grizzly bear recovery, wilderness, water rights, and federal legislation impacting working ranches, wilderness study areas, and tribal water settlements.

We've hiked out to visit the Snowcrest Recommended Wilderness, visited the grazing allotments that are so integral to Ruby Valley ranchers, and we've looked at ambitious conservation efforts permit-holders have undertaken on public land. Having these conversations and taking the time to understand issues more deeply has shown us things that had been previously clouded by misconceptions and distrust: the members of the group want a lot of the same things for southwest Montana, and we get closer to achieving that vision when we're working with one another.

Montana ranchers and conservationists have a long and proud history of working together on land conservation, from the Blackfoot River Valley to the Rocky Mountain Front. We believe community-driven collaborative efforts are vital for maintaining not just Montana's wild backcountry and working ranchlands, but also our traditions and way of life. This is how we build respect for each other, identify important issues facing Montanans, and advance real solutions to protect the open spaces so vital to Montanan's outdoor heritage.

The Ruby Valley Strategic Alliance is a group of ranchers, conservationists, and business owners working to build long-lasting relationships to maintain our working lands, wilderness heritage, high-quality recreation, and outdoor way of life in southwest Montana.

SW Montana Veteran's Home Update #24

By Mike Lawson

Greetings once again to you the six counties in SW Montana who are represented as the organizations and chief supporters of the SW MT Veterans Home.

It's been somewhat of an exciting day for me on this Friday, November 15. I was invited to a meeting with our state DPHHS Bureau Chief Shaunda Hildebrand and SWMTVH Liaison Mark Gollinger, concerning our SW MT Vet Home. This was an eye opening experience as to what is involved during construction and the many steps to the actual running of this, our rest/nursing home. The many steps involving "many must pass inspections" by different government agencies, for the contractors building our rest home and the contractor who will operate are incredible. Our Liaison Mark Gollinger will be one busy guy in making sure everything meets the inspection standards set by the different agencies involved. This is good for us, the veteran, to know things are being done right. We completed this meeting by going to the SW MT VET site and doing a walk through of the construction site. We walked through the Community Center plus Cottage #1, and both of them, have most of the interior walls framed and in place. I was impressed and I now have an idea of just how beautiful the interiors are going to be, with big windows looking out on the East Ridge and the Highland Mountains.

Community Center Building - Trusses are on and the carpenters are getting the fire treated plywood roof sheeting placed over/on them.

Cottage #1 - The roof trusses are on site and it's very realistic to assume that at the time this article is in your hands, the roof truss crew will be putting them in place. Cottage #2 - Framing the exterior walls will be the focus. Cottage #3 - On hold and curing (Mike Ascherman's verbiage) until Cottage #2 is framed. Cottage #4 - On hold and curing. Cottage #5 - Finally this, the last our Cottages, had its slab floor poured by Steed Concrete on Thursday. Once this is completed Cottage #5 will be on "hold and curing" until the carpenter framers move from the other Cottages, that have the framing completed, to this our last Cottage.

I continue to marvel at the engineering and quality of materials/workmanship happening with these Veteran Home Buildings. I have confidence that Markovich Construction Superintendent Mike Ascherman and his construction crews are up to the task and in fact have passed all inspections up to this date. That says a lot.

Until next time, keep warm and take care.
