Alicejane Carkeek Fowler, 85

Alicejane passed away on January 22, 2020 at Pioneer Care and Rehabilitation Center in Dillon, Mont. She made the journey in the loving embraces of family and friends.

Alicejane, also known by some as "Aj," and by others as "Corky," was born on June 12, 1934 in Butte, Mont. to John Carkeek and Mildred McCawley. She had two sisters: Jeanne (Pete) Bigley and Lois (James) Schmitt, who have all preceded her in death. Music was always an essential part of the sisters' lives. Corky played the cello and piano, Lois the violin and Jeanne the piano. Early in their lives Jeanne and Lois played professionally; Corky chose to prepare for a teaching career.

From her beginnings Corky was shy and very private, refusing to go to school. Gradually she learned to accept her classmates. Her zest for life began to blossom as she energetically twirled double batons as head majorette in the Butte High School Marching Band. She expanded her connections with Butte High by playing the cello in the school orchestra. She and her family would share their love of the outdoors by spending many fun-filled hours fishing small streams within driving distance of home – usually on over-nighters.

After graduation in 1952 she continued to pursue her love of music by attending Montana State University (now U of M) in Missoula with aspirations to teach. She earned her bachelor of music in 1956.

While attending school she met her life-long friend, Frank Fowler. They married in Butte in 1957. Their first adventure took them to Sullivan Lake Ranger Station in Washington. In the following years they bounced around to various U.S. Forest Service assignments in Washington, Idaho and Montana. Many of their early assignments were in back-country areas. Each was a new adventure. Sometimes there was only a generator for electricity and a crank telephone for personal communication and Corky's connection to music was primarily through a phonograph, but she loved it all, and joyfully joined with Frank in raising their family.

Their last move was to Dillon where she taught UM Western students how to teach string instruments in rural schools. She played cello in the Dillon Orchestra and in small ensembles. Also of great satisfaction to her was teaching private lessons. While she usually did not have a large number of students, she never tired of imparting her passion for music or of witnessing the growth students displayed as they struggled to learn to play the cello.

Corky had an abiding appreciation for nature. In her younger years she eagerly pursued hiking and camping and occasionally horseback riding. As the years passed, her attention turned more to bird-watching. She always found time to stop, watch, and listen to her beautiful winged friends.

She is survived by her beloved husband of 62 years,

UMW Professors Receive National Science Foundation CREWS Grants

Regents Professor of Geology Dr. Rob Thomas and Assistant Professor of Environmental Sustainability Dr. Arica Crootof have each received Montana National Science Foundation (NSF) Consortium for Research on Environmental Water Systems (CREWS) Workforce Development Seed Funding Awards. Both of these $10,000 grants will be used to support student research beginning in February, continuing over the summer and concluding this fall.

Students from Dr. Rob Thomas's "Environmental Field Studies" class working on the Upper Clark Fork River.
Water quality contamination is a pressing challenge in the Upper Clark Fork River. Through both of these grants, students from the University of Montana Western will be engaged in collecting physical and social science data to inform management decisions on local water systems and in the process, gain valuable research experience and professional skills.

Dr. Thomas and his students will work with Restoration Specialist Alex Leone of the Clark Fork Coalition to conduct a baseline assessment of (a) stream morphology, function, and stability, (b) sediment transport and distribution, (c) geochemistry, (d) macroinvertebrates, and (e) riparian vegetation on several miles of the Upper Clark Fork near Galen, Mont. The research will be conducted in the early fall of 2020 by upper-level undergraduate students in a capstone course entitled "Environmental Field Studies."

Students will produce a final assessment report with data and recommendations for Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks and the Department of Environmental Quality. These agencies will then use the data to construct remediation designs. The grant also includes travel funds for five students to attend the National Resource Damage Conference and share their work more broadly. According to Thomas, this work can only be done because of Montana Western's unique Experience One scheduling system.

"It's our freedom from scheduling that allows us to immerse students in authentic practice in the discipline. The report the students construct and the skills they develop are all crucial portfolio pieces for jobs and graduate school. Few undergraduate students in the United States get a chance to work on such a high-profile stream remediation project, and the payoffs will extend well beyond their class," Thomas explained.

Dr. Crootof's grant will fund student research in two of her courses ("Sustainable Natural Resources Management" in Block 6 and "Human Dimensions of Global Change" in Block 1) and will allow for an additional 400 hours of paid student research over the summer. The focus of this research is to understand public perceptions of water contamination and public health concerns regarding the Warm Springs Ponds near Anaconda, Mont. to inform reclamation decisions.

By training University of Montana Western students in social science research design and application, students will be working to document recreational use and public perceptions of water quality and contamination of the Warm Springs. As Dr. Crootof explains, "I am excited to bring research methods into my courses and have students experience both the challenges and rewards of collecting observation, survey, interview, and public records data and learn first-hand the importance of not just collecting good data, but also how to relay new knowledge to decision-makers that is both accessible and usable."

Dr. Crootof also agrees that Montana Western's unique block scheduling is paramount to engaging undergraduate students in field methods and research. "From research design, to data collection and analysis, to report writing, and public presentations, UMW students will be engaging in collaborative, interdisciplinary research projects that will inform reclamation needs for the Upper Clark Fork River."

For more information regarding Dr. Thomas's and Dr. Crootof's upcoming courses and projects, you can contact them via email at rob.thomas@umwestern.edu and arica.crootof@umwestern.edu. To find out more about the CREWS project and all of their study sites around Montana, visit the Montana NSF EPSCoR website.
