UMW Partners with MT Tech and Carroll College to Can-COVID

Jason DeShaw and the Realize Hope Organization are proud to announce the launch of the Can-COVID campaign, a digital fundraising platform focused on raising funds in support of the Montana Food Bank Network, as well as student scholarships and assistance.

In partnership with Presenting Partners, Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Montana, and the Montana Office of Public Instruction, CanCOVID.us will provide 70 cents of every dollar raised to the Montana Food Bank Network and 30 cents directly to the emergency scholarship fund of the recipient's choosing.

As part of a collegiate campaign, the Montana Tech Foundation, the University of Montana Western Foundation and Carroll College have entered into a friendly competition to Can-COVID. The competition will raise funds for the Montana Food Bank Network and students whose education was impacted by the COVID-19 outbreak. Visit <https://cancovid.us> to donate and for more information.

"We are excited to partner with Realize Hope, Montana Tech, and Carroll College to raise funds to combat hunger in Montana and help support our students in Dillon," said UMW Foundation Director, Roxanne Engellant.

In addition to supporting the Montana Food Bank network, part of the funds raised will go to the Montana Western Foundation to be donated to the UMW Food Bank.

"We are all in this together and together we will make it through," says DeShaw, founder of Realize Hope, the force behind Can-COVID. The organization is planning a 3-month Montana High School Campaign in the fall. To donate visit CanCOVID.us or RealizeHope.org.

For more information, contact Julie Walker, Executive Director of Realize Hope by calling 406-223-0914 or email Director@RealizeHope.org.

Can-COVID is presented by Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Montana and the Montana Office of Public Instruction and sponsored by NorthWestern Energy, fourOsix, the Northern News Network and Action Print.

After 3rd death in a year, Montana Hi-Line rail crossing to be reviewed

Several recent fatal crashes involving trains on a heavily trafficked rural road east of Culbertson have prompted the Montana Department of Transportation to review the safety of the railroad crossing.

Weeks after the latest fatal crash involving a train that killed a 65-year-old Sidney man, the Montana Department of Transportation, Burlington Northern Santa Fe and Roosevelt County will open a "diagnostic review" of the crossing's safety.

Recent crashes

On May 29, an Amtrak passenger train hit Rocky Norby's tractor while he was crossing the tracks at Road 1013 about 9 miles east of Culbertson. Driving a John Deere tractor, Norby died on impact.

The crash derailed the train, which the Montana Highway Patrol estimated was traveling at about 75 mph, and slightly injured many of the 64 passengers. The crash sent three crew members to the hospital.

On June 3, the funeral for Norby filled the Richland County fairgrounds.

Everyone was welcome at the event, which gained the approval of the county's health board. For those unable to attend, the funeral was streamed on Facebook.

Although a shock, for locals the crash wasn't necessarily a surprise.

The communities of Bainville and Culbertson, which have a combined population of just more than 1,000, had already seen three fatalities on that stretch of railroad in the past 10 months.

In August, Caleb Fell, 21, and Bryan Pederson, 18, died at the railroad crossing on Road 1013.

The two young men, employees of Oil Waste Logistics, were hauling radioactive waste for the Culbertson company.

Pederson, the driver, didn't yield to an oncoming train, according to a Montana Highway Patrol investigation. Both men died on scene.

Two weeks later a train hit a semi and killed the driver at a railroad crossing just west of Road 1013.

Safety concerns

Locals remember numerous crashes at the railroad crossing, some serious and some lethal.

Memory stretches back to 1984 for Jason LaQua, founder and president of Oil Waste Logistics, who recalls a crash that year that left one dead.

The railroad crossing at Road 1013 was set up for failure, LaQua said.

"It's kind of a perfect storm of not being safe, and there's no flashing lights or arms or anything like that," he said.

The crossing lacks enough safety measures to allow for a landscape that makes the stretch of railroad nearly impossible to detect an oncoming train.

A narrow bridge approaches the crossing at a downward incline. Aside from a crossbuck sign there's no indication of the crossing, according to the Federal Railroad Administration.

Trees to either side of the crossing block views of the tracks and to the south a dirt mound obstructs the line, LaQua said.

The rural road is without street lamps or signal lights.

The busy Burlington Northern Santa Fe railroad, which runs along Highway 2, sees an average of about 25 trains per day, said spokesperson Courtney Wallace. Typically two Amtrak passenger trains travel the line daily.

After four fatalities, a train derailment and other minor crashes, locals are advocating for more safety measures.

"You're not going to find anybody here that says there shouldn't be railroad crossing arms," LaQua said.

Increasing safety

Last fall the county voted to replace and widen the bridge just north of the tracks, which serves as the approach to the crossing, said Roosevelt County Commissioner Gordon Oelkers.

Construction on the bridge should begin as soon as the county gets a BNSF permit, he said. The project has already been bid out.

"The approach had to be fixed before we apply and push for a study for arms," Oelkers said.

With a bridge project in mind, the county had already been in talks with the Montana Department of Transportation about conducting a safety study on the railroad crossing. The goal is to get crossing arms, he said.

"There's huge concern," he said. "The trouble with that is it's a slow process."

Installing the new bridge should be more than $200,000.

County funding had been set aside and Oelkers is confident that federal funding will come through for the crossing arms, which he estimates will cost about $300,000.

The cost of the crossing arms or signals are typically funded through the Section 130 Program, according to Lori Ryan, the public information officer for the Montana Department of Transportation.

The program provides funds for the elimination of hazards at railway-highway crossings, according to the Federal Highway Administration.

A trumpeter swan cygnet airs out its wings near its sibling and parents on a pond alongside Wildfowl Lane near the headquarters of the Lee Metcalf National Wildlife Refuge in this 2019 file photo.

Perry Backus, Ravalli Republic

TRUMPETER SWAN CYGNETS

For the second year in a row, the Lee Metcalf National Wildlife Refuge has a brood of trumpeter swan cygnets.

The refuge's manager, Tom Reed, said they were first spotted Sunday.

Reed saw what appeared to be three cygnets Wednesday. They were near the same muskrat lodge a pair of trumpeter swans used last year to hatch the first documented wild trumpeter swan cygnets in the Bitterroot since restoration efforts began decades ago to bring the birds back from the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states.

Reed thinks it may be the same pair that reared last year's cygnets, which remained at the refuge through the winter and into spring.

Last year's cygnets haven't been seen over the last few weeks. Reed thinks their parents may have encouraged them to leave as they prepared their courtship that led to this year's brood.

"If that's what has happened, it's a glorious thing," Reed said.

It would mean that a wild trumpeter swan breeding cycle has started at the refuge, which could lead to years of new cygnets at the popular refuge just north of Stevensville.

Last year, once the cygnets grew a bit, the trumpeter swan
