Bear Creek Fire continues active fire behavior, hazardous Red Flag Conditions persist

The Bear Creek Fire was reported at approximately 10:30 am on August 11 in the Lemhi Pass area on the Dillon Ranger District of the Beaverhead-Deerlodge National Forest.

The fire size increased to approximately 1,500 acres this morning from the approximate 200 acres last evening. Fire officials report that it burned actively through the night due to low RH factors, which also limited humidity recovery for fuels. The cause of the fire remains unknown.

An area closure will be done for public and firefighter safety, the first priority of fire management officials. Weather predictions show continued Red Flag Warning conditions including high winds, low humidity and a significant amount of dry fuels. The Red Flag Warning weather is predicted to persist through today.

Resources on scene remain the same, with an addition of helicopters to two Type 1, two Type 2, and one Type 3 helicopters. Resources on site include: three Type 1 Crews; one Type 2 Crews; a Type 2 Initial Attack Crew; six Type 6 Engines; 1 tactical Water Tender.

The Type 2 Incident Management Team (IMT) arrives today with an in-briefing planned at noon, following which the Type 2 Team will shadow current fire officials. At 6:00 am tomorrow, August 13, the Type 2 team will assume control of the fire.

Smoke was laying in valleys early this morning, but will begin to "kick up" throughout the day. Smoke is visible over a large area, including Dillon, communities of the Big Hole Valley, Tendoy, Lemhi Valley, and the area surrounding Salmon, Idaho.

Prepare for Fire Season

If you live in an area where the wildfire risk is high, take steps now to prepare for fire season. Being prepared for fire season is especially important for the health of children, older adults, and people with heart or lung disease.

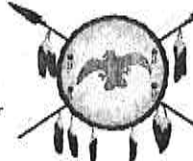

Before a Wildfire

- If any family member has heart or lung disease, including asthma, check with your doctor about what you should do during smoke events. Have a plan to manage your condition.
- Stock up so you don't have to go out when it's smoky. Have several days of medications on hand. Buy groceries that do not need to be refrigerated or cooked because cooking can add to indoor air pollution.
- Create a "clean room" in your home. Choose a room with no fireplace and as few windows and doors as possible, such as a bedroom. Use a portable air cleaner in the room.
- Buy a portable air cleaner before there is a smoke event. Make sure it has high efficiency HEPA filters and it is the right size for the room.
- Know how you will get alerts and health warnings, including air quality reports, public service announcements (PSAs), and social media warning you about high fire risk or an active fire.
- Ask an air conditioning professional what kind of high efficiency filters to use in your home's system and how to close the fresh-air intake if your central air system or room air conditioner has one.
- Have a supply of N95 respirators and learn how to use them. They are sold at many home improvement stores and online.
- Organize your important items ahead of time, including financial and personal documents. Know your evacuation routes and where to go if you have to evacuate. Make sure to prepare your children, and consider your pets when making an evacuation plan.

During a Wildfire

- Follow instructions from local officials to keep yourself and your family safe.
- Stay inside with the doors and windows closed. Run your air conditioner with the fresh-air intake closed ("recirculate mode") to keep smoke from getting indoors. Seek shelter elsewhere if you do not have an air conditioner and it is too warm to stay inside with the windows closed.

- Follow your health care provider's advice if you have heart or lung disease, and follow your management plan if you have one. If your symptoms worsen, reduce your exposure to smoke and contact your provider.
- Do not add to indoor air pollution. Do not burn candles or use gas, propane, wood-burning stoves, fireplaces, or aerosol sprays. Do not fry or broil meat, smoke tobacco products, or vacuum. All of these can increase air pollution indoors.
- Use a portable air cleaner to reduce indoor air pollution. Follow the manufacturer's instructions on where to put the air cleaner and when to replace the filters.
- Reduce how much smoke you inhale. If it looks or smells smoky outside, avoid strenuous activities such as mowing the lawn or going for a run. Wait until air quality is better before you are active outdoors.
- Pay attention to local air quality reports and health warnings. Smoke levels can vary a lot during the day, so you may have a chance to do errands and open up windows when air quality is better. Public service announcements give you important information such as changing conditions, cancelled events, or evacuation notices.
- Do not rely on dust masks or bandanas for protection from smoke. An N95 respirator can protect you if it fits snugly to your face and is worn properly. These are not recommended for children.
- Reduce smoke in your vehicle by closing the windows and vents and running the air conditioner in recirculate mode. Slow down when you drive in smoky conditions.

MLEA Instructor to Retire on Friday after 30 Years of Public Service

On Friday, Montana's law enforcement community will experience a changing of the guard when long-time Montana Department of Justice (DOJ) employee Jeff Douglass retires after 30 years of public service.

Jeff began his DOJ career in 1990 as a Montana Highway Patrol (MHP) trooper in Shelby. After eight years of service there, Jeff transferred to his hometown of Helena. Two years later, his career as a trooper was cut short when he medically retired from MHP following an injury.

"Just three days later, I went to work for the department's Division of Criminal Investigation as the State DARE Coordinator," Jeff recalled. "DCI then began to manage the Montana Law Enforcement Academy, and I was asked to instruct the driving program. At that point in time, we only had four practice cars; the program now has 80. MHP has always seen to it that we had the vehicles we needed. Once a trooper, always a trooper!" Jeff said, smiling.

Jeff, 68, credits a willingness to serve where needed and a life-long commitment to physical fitness as the cornerstones of his lengthy DOJ career. Soon after he began inviting students to work out with him twice a week, Jeff added another responsibility to his official duties at the Academy, which trains Montana's state, county, city, and tribal officers. "One of Jeff's most noteworthy accomplishments is bringing the Montana Physical Abilities Test to Montana," notes Glen Stinar, MLEA Administrator. The MPAT is a hybrid physical ability/job physical abilities assessment process designed to evaluate law enforcement officer candidates on essential physical capacities required to satisfactorily perform job duties that are simulated or performed in the training environment.

Successful MPAT completion is a pre-requisite to attending the Academy's Law Enforcement Officer Basic Course. Stinar added, "Jeff has traveled across Montana several times per year for the last twelve years administering the MPAT, which is now the state standard for public safety physical fitness testing and is used by many agencies as part of their wellness programs."

Jeff, whose official title is Manager of Police Vehicle Operations and MPAT Programs, says two of the biggest changes in law enforcement he's seen over the last three decades is the younger generation's increased desire to be physically fit, and that law enforcement is a more difficult profession now, given the country's current climate. Several years ago, Jeff started a tradition of taking Law Enforcement Officer Basic Course students on a hike up Mount Helena each spring. When they reach the top, he reads Shel Silverstein's "The Giving Tree" to them. The book is about a boy and a tree, and how the tree has to give more of itself as the boy grows to keep him happy. Jeff draws the analogy for students that a public safety career involves giving of yourself in order to serve others. "If you're not a giver in this profession, you're not going to have a good time doing it," Jeff emphasizes. "In our oath, we pledge to help the downtrodden and uphold the Constitution. We may give up our lives for someone we don't know because they're in our custody. I always tell students that if they sincerely like people and want to help them, they'll be good officers," Jeff added.

About the only thing Jeff hasn't done at MLEA over the last twenty years is get tased, and for good reason: In 2010, he suffered a ruptured brain aneurysm on Thanksgiving and underwent surgery at a Billings hospital the next day. Soon after, he visited the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota, seeking treatment for another aneurysm, located behind his left eye. Unable to correct it without causing lasting damage, Mayo specialists gave Jeff the green light to continue his physically active lifestyle, with the exception of getting tased. Jeff, who gets regular MRIs to monitor his condition, says, "The doctors said it's a miracle I lived and I still feel lucky to be alive. God's got a bigger plan for me; He gets the credit. I know He worked in my life in a mighty

Faith has always been a driving force in Jeff's life. Before entering law enforcement, he and his family spent time in the South Pacific building houses as part of a youth ministry. In retirement, Jeff will return to his construction roots and build a new house where he and his wife of 40 years, Linda, will be able to spend more time with their two grown daughters and six grandchildren. Jeff plans to keep active in his church, and looks forward to more hiking and mountain bike riding.

"I love law enforcement and I will miss it -- my students, my co-workers, graduations; all of it," Jeff said. "I've got tons of friends in law enforcement around the state and of course, I'll miss them, too."

Attorney General Tim Fox echoed that sentiment, saying, "Each of us at the Montana Department of Justice will miss Jeff's professionalism, positive demeanor, and dedication to serving others. He embodies the powerful impact a career in public service can have for years to come. Instructors like Jeff are the reason why MLEA is recognized as a leader in developing well-prepared public safety officers for communities across Montana. We wish Jeff all the best in his well-deserved retirement."
