"Fire on the Mountain" and "Explosive Volcanoes" at the Caverns

-Friday, Aug. 21, and Saturday, Aug. 22, at 8 p.m.-

Montana State Parks (stateparks.mt.gov) and Lewis & Clark Caverns State Park will host the free presentations "Fire on the Mountain: The Past, Present, and Future of Wildfire in Montana" on Friday, Aug. 21, and "The Explosive Lives of Volcanoes" on Saturday, Aug. 22, both at 8 p.m. at the park's campground amphitheater.

On Friday, Aug. 21, at 8 p.m., join us to learn more about wildfire as Sean Parks discusses the patterns, causes and consequences of wildfire in Montana. Historically, wildfire played an important role in shaping vegetation patterns in the state, and in fact, several tree species evolved to co-exist with fire. Sean will discuss how wildfire frequency and severity have changed over the last century and how we might expect the role of fire to change in future decades.

This is the 14th presentation in Lewis & Clark Caverns State Park's annual Friday Summer Speaker Series, which will continue each Friday at 8 p.m. throughout August.

Sean Parks is a scientist with the Aldo Leopold Wilderness Research Institute, which is part of the research and development branch of the U.S. Forest Service. He has studied wildfire in Montana and other western states for the last decade. He often links on-the-ground field data with satellite imagery to make inferences over large landscapes. Sean is passionate about wild places and wildfire.

What: "Fire on the Mountain: The Past, Present, and Future of Wildfire in Montana" with Sean Parks

When: Friday, Aug. 21 from 8 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Where: Campground Amphitheater

On Saturday, Aug. 22, at 8 p.m., learn about "The Explosive Lives of Volcanoes" from Park Ranger Julia Smit. When rock melts and the earth spews fire and ash into the air, you have some pretty exciting geology. See how explosive action shaped the landscape in southwest Montana.

What: "The Explosive Lives of Volcanoes"

When: Saturday, August 22 from 8 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Where: Campground Amphitheater

COVID-19 Safety Guidance as Students and Schools Return to In-Person Learning

As the start of the school year is quickly upon us, medical professionals at Barrett Hospital & HealthCare are preparing for an influx of questions and concerns about children's health and safety.

"Moving forward with school there's a lot of uncertainty about how this is going to go," Dr. Greg Moore, Chief Medical Officer at Barrett Hospital & HealthCare, said. "Healthcare professionals learned a lot in the first days and weeks and months of the pandemic, and our schools and students are going to have to do the same and we will be here ready to support them."

We all must accept that COVID-19 will stay with us for a long time, and as we move on with certain activities in our lives, such as schooling, there are a lot of ways to help mitigate infection risk. Barrett Hospital & HealthCare outlines five recommended practices to help stem the spread of the coronavirus between students and faculty as schools return to in-person learning. Ranked in importance, they are:

1. Masks-wearing of face coverings at all times
2. Social Distancing- execute six feet or more
3. Hand Hygiene- frequent hand washing with soap and water for at least twenty seconds
4. Cleaning surfaces-enhance cleaning measures and frequency
5. Immunizations-ensure children and adolescents are current on vaccinations

Parents be sure to stay on track with vaccinations by making sure your son or daughter has a yearly Well-child visit with his or her primary care provider. Well-child visits, for ages birth to age 18, involve a head-to-toe examination as well as essential screenings and tests. In addition, the Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) recommends asking to have a sports physical included when scheduling a Well-child visit.

My Only Rodeo

Bryce Angell

I watched him pull the latch and then he hollered, "Let 'em out!"

I was gonna learn my lesson of what rodeo's about.

My so-called friend had taunted me, "Give rodeo a try." But my grandma's words were warning me, "You better learn to fly."

And sure as heck the first buck sent me flying in the air.

I guess my dear ol' grandma knew I'd soon be heading there.

I've heard it said that when you bump your head, you'll see some stars.

Or maybe even hear the angels humming blissful bars.

But friend I'm telling you when I came down and hit my head.

I heard the angels yodeling. Dang sure thought I was dead.

A myriad of stars were flashing right before my eyes. They were red and green and purple. Were they courting my demise?

My head was pounding like a dozen hammers in my brain.

Felt like I'd just been flattened by a runaway freight train.

One cowboy pulled me to the side. He held two fingers up.

I swear I saw two fingers, but I babbled giddyup.

The cowboy brushed me off. He said, "Just sit here for a spell."

For once someone with sound advice. He knew I felt like #%&&.

The cutest cowgirl stopped and said, "I know you really tried.

And I'm sure you broke a record with your half a second ride."

Well, I didn't need her teasing, so I left there hastily.

I knew right then that rodeo was not the game for me.

So, fifty years has come and gone since buckin' off that night.

And I've only ridden saddle horses, they're a pure delight.

Sometimes while watching rodeo, it jogs my memory.

No wonder I prefer a gentle horse that's under me.

Wildfire Smoke and COVID-19

The purpose of this document is to provide Air Resource Advisors and other environmental health professionals with key messages about wildfire smoke and COVID-19. It also provides resources that can be given to communities affected by wild- fire smoke during community spread of SARS- CoV-2, the virus that causes COVID-19. This document was created in collaboration with CDC and COVID-19 related information was reviewed and cleared by CDC.

Why do people need to consider COVID-19 along with wildfire smoke?

- The COVID-19 pandemic is overlapping with the occurrence of wildfires in the United States.
- Wildfire smoke is a complex mixture of air pollutants that are harmful to human health.
- Exposure to air pollutants in wildfire smoke can irritate the lungs, cause inflammation, alter immune function, and increase susceptibility to respiratory infections, likely including COVID-19.
- Recent scientific publications (Conticini et al., 2020 & Travaglio et al., 2020) suggest that air pollutant exposure worsens COVID-19 symptoms and outcomes.

Who is most at risk from wildfire smoke?

- Populations known to be vulnerable to wildfire smoke exposures include:
- Children younger than 18.
- Adults age 65 years or older.
- Pregnant women.
- People with chronic health conditions such as heart or lung disease, asthma or diabetes.
- Outdoor workers.
- People of low socioeconomic status, including those who are homeless and with limited access to medical care.

Who else is at risk from wildfire smoke during the COVID-19 pandemic?

The overlap of the COVID-19 pandemic with wildfire season in the United States complicates public health response to wildfire smoke. People who are either susceptible to or affected by COVID-19 may have health conditions that also make them vulnerable to wildfire smoke exposure. Persons who might also be at risk from wildfire smoke because of COVID-19 include:

- Those who are immunocompromised or taking drugs that suppress the immune system;
- Those with or recovering from COVID-19. Because of compromised heart and lung function due to COVID-19, they may be at increased risk of health effects from exposure to wildfire smoke.

Respiratory symptoms such as dry cough, sore throat, and difficulty breathing are common to both wildfire smoke exposure and COVID-19.

How are symptoms from wildfire smoke exposure different from symptoms of COVID-19?

- Information on symptoms of COVID-19 is available. If you are experiencing symptoms unrelated to smoke exposure such as, fever or chills, muscle or body aches, diarrhea, the CDC COVID-19 Self-Checker can help determine whether further assessment or testing for COVID-19 is needed.
- If you have questions after using the CDC COVID-19 Self-Checker, you should contact a healthcare provider.
- If you are experiencing severe symptoms, such as difficulty breathing or chest pain, you should seek prompt medical attention by calling 911 or calling ahead to the nearest emergency facility.

Where can I find information about current air quality and COVID-19 in my area?

- Use the Air Quality Index (AQI) to evaluate local and regional air quality conditions.
- Visit www.airnow.gov to find reliable information about wildfire smoke and air quality.
- If there is a large wildfire in your area, then there is likely an Air Resource Advisor assigned to provide wildfire smoke outlooks.
- For further information about wildfire smoke and your health, visit, www.cdc.gov/air/wildfire-smoke/default.htm.
- Visit the CDC COVID Data Tracker for more information about COVID-19.
- Check resources from state, local, tribal, and territorial health departments for more information on COVID-19 cases and deaths in a given area.

BEAR CREEK FIRE

SPECIAL CONCERNS: Those recreating on Clark Canyon Reservoir should be aware of aircraft using the water source for fire activity. Recreators should stay clear of area aircraft. Public and firefighter safety concerns are the top priority. Any public using the roads near the fire area should expect heavy fire traffic; please drive slowly for safety reasons. Hunters should check Inciweb and/or call for closure information and maps.

The fire is burning in timber/heavy fuels. These fuels will continue to dry out with low relative humidity. The area provides poor access and there is a lack of water in the immediate area of the fire. Crews will work to protect cultural resources and other values at risk.

CLOSURES: Area, road, and trail closures are in effect. Refer to the "Closures" and "Photos" tabs of the Inciweb site for narrative descriptions and maps of all agency closures. Lemhi Pass Road is closed from its junction with Montana Highway 324 to Lemhi Pass. The public is strongly encouraged to refrain from entering the area/nearby road system due to heavy fire traffic.

ATTENTION HUNTERS

During the
Bear Creek Fire,
please be aware of:

Area, road, and trail closures

Heavy fire traffic on area roads

High fire danger
and local restrictions

Hunters should check for closures due to wildfires before going afield

Several wildfires are active in Montana, and this can affect land access for hunters in some areas.

Wildfire activity can change rapidly, and some fires may limit public access to roads and areas of public land. Wildfires can also cause closures on block management areas during hunting season. Hunters should check for closures due to wildfires before traveling.

Recreationists can view an interactive map of active wildfires in Montana by visiting <https://inciweb.nwccg.gov/>. If a fire is active near where you plan to hunt, contact the local office of the applicable land management agency to check for closures.

Hunters should also check for closures on block management areas, as well as fishing access sites, wildlife management areas and other areas administered by Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks, by visiting fwp.mt.gov/news/restrictions.

A map of fire restrictions by county can be found at firerestrictions.us/mt.

Hunters and anglers can help prevent wildfires by adhering to fire restrictions, making sure campfires are completely out and following road and travel restrictions.
