Mrs. Tucker-Helle, Joann Piazzola, Cole Webster, Sage Rhodes,
Harper Felo, Ashlyn Burke, Kelly Webster, Max Hagenbarth,
Ms Jensen, Bette Hull

Members from the Silver Bow Chapter of the DAR, Joann Piazzola and Bette Hull, made presentations to students at Reichle School for their entries in the essay contest sponsored by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The topic for the essay was to imagine that you are living in Boston in 1770, and you witnessed the Boston Massacre on March 5. You are to describe your family's discussion about the event and the role it played in organizing the Colonists against the British King and Parliament. Although the contest is open to 5-8 grades, the fourth graders at Reichle, Sage Rhodes and Max Hagenbarth, also wrote essays even though they were not submitted. Seventh grader Cole Webster and fifth grader Kelly Webster both placed first at their grade levels. Cole also received notice that his essay was the Montana State Winner for seventh grade. He will be presented his State Award at the DAR State Conference in April. His essay has been forwarded to the next level.

Parents of Cole and Kelly are Dan and Teresa Webster.

Big Green Tent

Bryce Angell

The day was nearly over, started out at early sun. Each horse was fed and watered. They were worn and all but done. The cowboys trudged while walking. Said, "Our legs feel just like lead." So, they shuffled to the big green tent in hopes of getting fed. The big green tent had seen its share of war from years gone by.

The cloth was torn and tattered, not so pleasant to the eye. The cold night air was frigid but inside the big green tent was hotter than blue blazes from the wood stove's open vent.

Soon enough the tent was full of cowboys spinning tales and offering heaps of wisdom with embellishing details. The smell of sausage gravy put each nose up in the air.

One cowboy said, "I'm 'bout as hungry as a grizzly bear!" The cowboys grabbed their plates and then the nod came from the cook. The frenzy jumped up to the food like fishes to a hook. The noise turned into chomping food. 'Twas something to admire. The cook compared it to cold water on a blazing fire.

With bellies full the cowboys pulled out peanuts from a jar. One cowboy sang some George Strait music from his own guitar. The cook recited poetry. Another told a tale of an uncle selling whiskey, how it cost him time in jail.

The cowboys all were smiling, spirits full and plumb content, while surrounded in the arms of the old army big green tent. Then one by one each cowboy stood and turned in for the night.

The last one tied the tent flap door with square knots nice and tight. The big green tent was empty, but for only just awhile.

Cuz breakfast was for certain. How that made the old tent smile.

Weekly Report and Transmittal Review

By Senator Jeff Welborn

Now at the halfway mark of 67th Legislature, a myriad of different proposals were brought forward. New and seasoned lawmakers pushed forward proposals focused on tax cuts, health care expansion, right-to-work legislation, changes to election laws, and restructuring the divisions of power during an emergency response.

Republicans in the House and Senate, as well as in Gov. Greg Gianforte's administration, have claimed success on a number of fronts. Democrats are citing more incremental wins and victories in blocking proposals from the more hardline wing of the GOP.

Here's a breakdown of the significant policy reforms taking shape in the Legislature so far. A slate of tax policies put forward by Gov. Greg Gianforte under the banner of his "Montana Comeback Plan" mostly moved forward with Republican support overriding Democratic opposition. Those measures would, increase exemptions for the business equipment tax and cut income taxes for higher earners in an effort to attract entrepreneurs to the state. Two tax reduction bills championed by Democrats were unsuccessful. One would have created a credit to help lower-income Montanans pay their property taxes, while another would have raised income taxes on top earners to expand a tax credit for working families. Both were voted down in their initial hearings in the House and Senate. Other proposals put forward by Republicans and Democrats alike seek to expand access to rural broadband infrastructure considered critical to increasing economic opportunities in less densely populated areas of Montana. One bill would offer tax breaks to telecom companies to encourage them to install fiber optic and coaxial internet cables; it has advanced to the second chamber. Another bill would encourage collaboration between other infrastructure development and broadband providers. A third bill, to allow for municipal broadband, died in its final vote in the House.

As a response to public health orders that some believe were issued without consideration of small businesses or the ability of citizens to attend religious services, lawmakers have considered a handful of Republican-backed bills that would limit the authority of public health officials as well as unilateral power of the governor. While several related measures are floating through the Legislature separately, House lawmakers this week passed two, House Bill 121 and House Bill 230, that would accomplish those goals. HB 121 would give elected officials like city councils and county commissions more say in enacting public health regulations and the ability to rescind or amend health official mandates made during an emergency, like a pandemic. HB 230 would give the Legislature the power to cancel or alter orders made in an emergency declaration from the governor. Both measures would prohibit regulation of attendance at religious services.

The first half of the session was successful for K-12 public education funding. Lawmakers passed an inflationary funding increase for elementary and secondary schools into law before the transmittal break, giving individual districts clarity as they finalize their budgets for the next academic year. The Legislature also approved a $17 million appropriation of federal COVID-19 relief funds for Montana's education system. A measure incentivizing salary increases for beginning teachers was signed into law Friday, and a bill to include inflationary costs in the K-12 special education budget passed the House this week with strong bipartisan support.

Education policy, however, had mixed results during the first 45 days. Several controversial proposals impacting public schools were voted down, including a bill relaxing immunization requirements for students. But other debates will continue after transmittal, among them a bill to require students to opt in to sex education and one to prohibit transgender women and girls from participating in women's sports. Meanwhile, House Bill 246 — arguably one of the most impactful education bills of the 67th Legislature — sailed from the House to the Senate with only a single opposing vote. It would implement major changes to state law to broaden teacher certification requirements and grant more decision-making flexibility to local school officials.

In the first month of the session, House Republicans introduced a package of bills that would widely curtail abortion access. By transmittal week, four of them had cleared committee hearings and advanced through both chambers on party-line votes.

Several election law changes survived the Legislature's transmittal deadline. Among the Republican proposals are House Bill 176, which eliminates same-day voter registration, and Senate Bill 169, which narrows photo-ID requirements for voters. Supporters say the bills will ensure the integrity of Montana's elections. Critics say the changes will disenfranchise voters across the state, particularly in rural communities and on reservations.

On the wildlife front, wolves and bison have been the focus of several pieces of legislation that have passed with broad Republican support. Reps. Paul Fielder and Bob Brown are sponsoring two measures apiece that aim to reduce the state's wolf population, which they say is too high. House Bill 225 would expand and codify trapping season start dates in law, and House Bill 224 would allow snare traps to be used on wolves. Regulations regarding bison are still in play. House Bill 302, a measure by Josh Kassmier, RFort Benton, would require county commissioners to sign off on bison relocations in their jurisdiction. It passed the House Agriculture Committee but has yet to go before the full House for a vote. (It's subject to an April 1 transmittal deadline.) Rep. Kenneth Holmlund's House Bill 318 to "clarify definition of bison" has passed its third reading in the House. Proponents say it would clarify who should pay taxes on domestic bison; opponents say it will limit the future establishment of wild bison herds. Sen. Pat Flowers, D-Bozeman, has also introduced a bison bill. Senate Bill 255, a measure before the Senate Fish and Game Committee, seeks to establish an auction for a wild bison tag to fund future wild bison conservation efforts. It's awaiting executive action in committee.

As in the past, the fate of the coal-fired power plant in Colstrip has loomed large in the 67th Legislature. There's been significant debate about who should pay for clean-up and stranded costs should Units 3 and 4 close ahead of schedule. Two bills brought by Sen. Steve Fitzpatrick, R-Great Falls, seek to hold Colstrip owners to the original terms of their agreement to prevent owners based on the West Coast from getting out of Colstrip, which could lead to those units closing down ahead of their depreciation schedules. Both of those measures have advanced with bipartisan support, though opponents say they re-write the terms of a 40-year-old agreement between private parties and are likely to be overturned in court.

Nuclear energy has been an under-the-radar topic of note, A study bill brought by Sen. Terry Gauthier, R-Helena, that directs the state to study modern nuclear reactors garnered unanimous support from senators of both parties. It's before the House Energy, Technology yet been set.

Southern Montana Shrine Club

We, the Southern Montana Shrine Club, would like to express our sincere gratitude for your support, during the Oyster Feed, and throughout the year. It is with your support that we, as Shriners, are able to assist children and families in need. Without your support that would simply not be possible.

We regret to inform you, that due to the uncertainty of Covid-19, we have decided to cancel the Oyster Feed for 2021. However, this gives us the opportunity to have a full year to plan for the 2022 Oyster Feed, and we hope to benefit by your continued support in the future.

Once again, thank you for all that you have done to ensure our success, and therefore ensure that families and children in need, in our community, receive the care that they require.

Sincerely,
Southern Montana Shrine Club
