MISSING PERSON UPDATE:

Tuesday afternoon the Beaverhead County Sheriff's Office received a call from a gentleman in St. George Utah who saw 2 men on motorcycles the day before matching the descriptions of Jason Morris and Derek Gore. He particularly recognized the unique motorcycle that Derek was riding. Both bikes had Montana plates.

Undersheriff Knox talked to the man who looked on Facebook posts for Jason and Derek on the BCSO page and said he was 100% certain it was them.

Early Wednesday morning Jason showed up at his home south of Dillon. His family is grateful for all the efforts to find Jason. Jason confirmed that he and Derek left together, but Derek has not returned home.

The Missing Person alert for Jason is canceled but Derek will remain in the NCIC database until located. The Beaverhead County Sheriff's Office would like to thank Beaverhead Search and Rescue went above and beyond for over a week with their usual professional methods and tactics, 9 search dogs teams from all over Western Montana who assisted in the search, numerous other Law Enforcement agencies who provided assistance particularly the Dillon Police Department for helping gather information on both men, and especially the public who spread the word via social media and word of mouth.

Hunters kill grizzly bear in self-defense encounter

A small group of hunters shot and killed a grizzly bear in the backcountry east of Gardiner on Oct. 3.

The hunters were processing a harvested elk near Bull Mountain during an early-season rifle hunt in Hunting District 316 when the bear appeared nearby and charged at the group. The hunters shot and killed the bear during its charge and were not injured. The bear was a 3- to 5-year-old female without cubs.

Wildlife and enforcement staff from Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks and the Custer Gallatin National Forest's Gardiner Ranger District met with the hunters and confirmed the bear mortality. The incident is still under investigation by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Recreationists, residents and people who work outdoors can be prepared for a surprise bear encounter. Activities that are deliberately quiet or fast moving, such as hunting, mountain biking or trail running, put people at greater risk for surprising a bear. Bears will be active throughout the general hunting season.

When you're spending time in Montana's outdoors, keep these precautions in mind:

- Be aware of your surroundings and look for bear sign.
- Read signs at trailheads and stay on trails. Be especially - careful around creeks and in areas with dense brush.

- Carry bear spray. Know how to use it and be prepared to deploy it immediately.
 - Travel in groups whenever possible and make casual noise, which can help alert bears to your presence.
 - Stay away from animal carcasses, which often attract bears.
 - Follow food storage orders from the applicable land management agency.
 - If you encounter a bear, never approach it. Leave the area when it is safe to do so.

Grizzly bears in the lower 48 states are listed as threatened under the Endangered Species Act. Management authority for grizzlies rests with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, working closely in Montana with FWP, the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Wildlife Services, the Forest Service and Tribal lands. This collaboration happens through the Interagency Grizzly Bear Committee.

UMW Students to Present NSF Funded Project at the Geological Society of America Conference

University of Montana Western students, Mana Bryant and Will Larson, will travel to Portland, Oregon to present their results from a 2020 National Science Foundation (NSF) funded Pioneer Mountains research project at the Geological Society of America (GSA) Connects 2021 Conference October 10-13.

Led by Dr. Spruce Schoenemann of the Montana Western Environmental Sciences (ES) Department, this NSF funded collaborative project was a student-led research project conducted in the Pioneer Mountains, near Dillon, Montana, with the goal to reconstruct the glacial retreat history of the region. The unique combination of block scheduling and the proximity to the once-glaciated Pioneer Mountains, made the University of Montana Western an ideal place for undergraduates to engage in this project.

Montana underlain by granite, making it possible to use Beryllium-10 (10Be) for cosmogenic nuclide geochemical dating and produce the first moraine chronologies for the region.

The project first started in the Fall 2020 semester with University of Vermont professor, Dr. Lee Corbett, providing ES students and faculty a virtual training on the use of cosmogenic nuclides for geochemical dating. The training included proper field techniques on how to identify and sample glacial boulders that would provide accurate dates for glacial retreat in the Pioneers.

In anticipation of the research grant, Dr. Schoenemann offered a special topics course titled "Glacial Geology of Montana" where students learned about geochronologic dating methods, glaciology, regional weather/climate patterns, applications of radioactive isotopes, and the development of paleoclimatic reconstructions.

At the onset of the Fall semester, UMW students Mana Bryant and Will Larson were selected to join the research project under the mentorship of Dr. Schoenemann. During the winter months, Bryant and Larson used topographic maps, aerial photos, and Google Earth to perform topographic analysis of which glacial moraine sets would be the best candidates for dating.

Once the snow melted in the late spring, Bryant and Larson participated in a 10-day field session to map surficial glacial deposits and collect rock samples from multiple moraines. They spent several days in the lab looking at locations and photos to determine which were the least eroded boulders, which were the least likely to have rolled or toppled over, and which were least likely to have been buried substantially by seasonal snowpacks in order to choose the best samples for dating.

By taking samples of the granite rocks and utilizing the cosmogenic nuclides for geochemical dating, the students would then test the hypothesis that glacier systems, located in continental regions proximal to the Laurentide Ice Sheet (LIS) and thus experience both cold temperatures and exceptionally low precipitation, may have reached local ice maximum considerably earlier than the LIS.

Bryant and Larson then took these samples to the Montana Tech rock preparation facilities to crush, grind and sieve the samples down to 250-850 micrometers in preparation for testing at the NSF-supported community cosmogeny laboratory at the University of Vermont.

During the early summer, Bryant and Larson traveled to the University of Vermont for eight weeks to learn and perform the complete process of sample preparation under the supervision of Dr. Corbett. Once purified, they were sent to the NSF-supported PRIME lab at Purdue University. Bryant and Larson worked remotely with Dr. Marc Caffee to learn how accelerator mass spectrometry analysis is done to determine cosmogenic ages and to interpret the dates.

The ages that were determined from the Purdue University PRIME lab, and the data collected during the entire year-long project, will be presented at the GSA Connects 2021 conference by Bryant and Larson from October 10-13.

Larson's poster titled "Glacial Mapping in the Arid Pioneer Mountains, Montana: Assessing Paleo-Elas during the Last Glacial Maximum" and Bryant's poster titled "Investigating Arid Alpine Pleistocene Glaciation in the Pioneer Mountains of Montana using Cosmogenic 10-Beryllium" combine to cover the entire scope of the project.

"This NSF project has offered the students a unique set of opportunities, including involvement from the initial site selection through the entire process, particularly with the chance to travel and work at a state-of-the-art research lab. It doesn't get more experiential than this!" said Schoenemann.

"When I first applied to college, I never would have imagined I would be standing here today, working with experts in their field and presenting what I learned at a national conference... all at an undergraduate level!" said Mana Bryant. "I hope to be able to continue being part of such fun collaborative projects after I graduate from Montana Western. The opportunities that arise for undergraduates here are truly experiential learning!"

For more information, please email spruce.schoenemann@umwestern.edu.
