AM I OVERTHINKING SLANG?

Tyrades! by Danny Tyree

As a writer, I can't deny harboring an appreciation for the richness of slang, metaphors, similes and colloquialisms.

And yet...there's something not quite rational about the agitators who force our language to evolve. ("Come on, participle! Crawl up on dry land! That gerund is beating you!")

There is an undisputed utility to manufactured terms such as "gerrymander," "carpetbagger" and "flyover country," but other linguistic innovations have been more frivolous. (Society's onetime fascination with "cutting a rug" and "bees' knees" did little to prevent the offshoring of textile jobs or our current pollination crisis, for example.)

The world has long needed more foster parents, a pathway to peace and a cure for cancer. Instead, we've had a procession of aspiration-challenged individuals who think they're due a Nobel Prize because they decided money should be "dough," coffee should be "Joe" and the word for a female dog desperately needed two syllables.

Self-restraint is a virtue, but we celebrate the anonymous linguistic philanthropist who whimpered, "Saying 'police officer' is so haaard. I've just got to say 'flatfoot.' Flatfoot flatfoot flatfoot - with a side of copper and fuzz!"

We just can't be satisfied. ("I've got magnificent Pacific waves, a top-of-the-line surfboard and a bevy of bikini-clad girls; but something is missing. 'Hang 10.' That's it! My life is complete. Wait...I didn't mean that literally. Quick! Somebody coin a nickname for sharks! Aiiiiieeee!")

No wonder people try so hard to coin new words or phrases. The rest of us have always acted as enablers. ("Y'all ain't gonna believe this stuff! I was just down at the club and Slim made a movement to shake my hand and said ...wait for it... 'gimme five!' I'll always remember this day, just like I remember when Pres. McKinley was assassinated!")

In modern times we have had the legacy media

(newspapers, TV, radio, the dark rings on wooly caterpillars) and social media for the swift dissemination of groundbreaking new figures of speech, but just think of how long our forebears had to wait for improvements.

Apparently there was a Johnny Appleseed of Slang who walked from hamlet to hamlet shouting, "Hear ye, hear ye! Scientists in Philadelphia have determined that the crookedness of an object can be measured against the curvature of a canine's hind leg."

I realize that cartoonists and jazz musicians have contributed a disproportionate amount of slang, but every subculture feels compelled to participate. ("You have a slightly enlarged left eyebrow, too? Let's form a society and develop our own secret language! 'Bad' will mean 'mediocre' and 'shoehorn' will mean 'myocardial infarction' and ...")

We have convinced ourselves that civilizations such as the Mayans, the Aztecs and the Incas crumbled primarily because they did not have a word for "lickety-split" or "easy peasy."

Oh, but who am I to stand in the way of the progress of language?

Before any more word origins are lost to the mists of time, we need a new Cabinet-level department to honor our unsung heroes.

"Here's a mural of the first choir that was ever preached to."

"On this historic front porch, a heart was blessed for the first time."

"Please - refrain from using your cellphone at the Tomb of the Unknown Whippersnapper."

Dude! This child of the Sixties has produced yet another essay that is "right on!"

Or at least right on its way to the bottom of the birdcage.

Letter to The Editor

This will be an unusual letter, if printed at all. No axe to grind.

I will call this Elderspeak, and know there is a broad base for it.

I was writing a condolence letter to a woman whose mother had died, and the words that came out on the paper surprised me. I was telling her that now, like so many, she had become the matriarch of her family, the woman whose love and wisdom were gifts to her family.

Were we an indigenous tribe, such wisdom holders would be called elders and honored. Sadly, our current president is being attacked as 'old', rather than as a person whose in depth and experience gives him insight and understanding of the basic values that hold us together rather than divide us.

I would so enjoy seeing this paper carry an occasional column called Elderspeak, ideas from those who've help carry the rigors of political, family and community life, refusing the cheap, revengeful, criticizing lines that blind our goodness to each other. I can think of times when an older person has cautioned me to think before acting, and I honor those who've help guide me when I felt lost or defeated. I value the fact that I can see, in my old age, that demonizing those who think and behave differently from me is doubly harmful, first to me.....did I think God only loves ME for my 'right' perspective on any particular issue?

We're encouraged in so many ways with reminders like 'Kindness matters', and 'Pay it forward', to say and do the right thing, but that frequently becomes a cliché when our feelings have been hurt, or the political opposition seems to be gaining. I believe we need to think carefully about why we seem to need someone or something to be against, an enemy (it worked in Germany all too well, and hasn't died out yet), when, in fact, we all bleed red blood and feel the same needs to be cared about.

What a great feeling it is when the vision and energy of younger people meets with the understandings that age can bring. I've been so blessed. I may be deemed old and the sidelines the best place for me now, but I choose to think of myself as someone who has passed many life tests and come through them with faith, gratitude and optimism - not Pollyanna grinning, but rock-sure understanding. To quote actor Rainn Willson, "Life is a journey of imperfection", and I know we've been given the tools, like truly listening to other points of view or ways to do things. We have the power, in small and sometimes large ways, to make life better for ourselves and others - should we decide to use it.

REWARDS

By "Swede" Troedsson

Some years ago, my girlfriend at the time and I drove in from Red Lodge to shop in Billings, Montana. One of our stops was at a Cabela's store. In front of the store, large numbers of side-by-side four wheelers and boats were lined up.

I decided to visit the GPS receiver counter. While there I noticed four large, rough looking men at the gun counter. I asked the GPS salesman who were those men at the gun counter. He replied they were oil workers from the Patch (North Dakota oil fields).

He went on to tell me that there were two brothers in Williston, ND, that owned a large trucking company. They would haul water to the oil drill sites. He said that they would charge EVERYTHING on their Cabela's credit card. In just a year's time they would earn over $10,000 in credit card rewards!

One of the brothers had just left the store with a $2,000 Swarovski spotting scope.

DOJ's OCP warns of scammers targeting Montana non-profits

The Montana Department of Justice's Office of Consumer Protection (OCP) is warning non-profit organizations of scammers who are targeting them with fake donations and then asking for a portion of the money back, Attorney General Austin Knudsen announced today.

OCP has received reports that individual(s) under fake pseudonyms including, 'Barrington Blythe,' are making donations to non-profit organizations on behalf of a recently deceased family member for $191,250 with fraudulent cashier's checks. The checks appear to be legitimate as they come from a US Bank account, but once the checks are received and cashed by the non-profit organization, the scammer follows up, asking for $91,000 of the donation back claiming accountant error hoping the non-profit will send the requested portion of the money back to the scammer before realizing that the check is fraudulent.

Montanans should keep in mind that this is also a common scam that fraudsters use to steal money from individuals.

The Office of Consumer Protection offers a few tips to Montanans and non-profit organizations to avoid falling for this scam:

- Do your due diligence; research the individual(s) or entity named on any check you receive in the mail.
- Never return money to an individual immediately after cashing a check.
- Verify all donors by asking for multiple forms of identification before accepting donations.
- Reach out to neighboring organizations to find out whether they have received similar communication, and always trust your gut.

To report an attempted scam, use OCP's convenient online reporting form here. You can also call to speak with an investigator at (800) 481-6896 or (406) 444-4500, visit OCP's homepage at <https://dojmt.gov/consumer/>, or call your local law enforcement agency.
