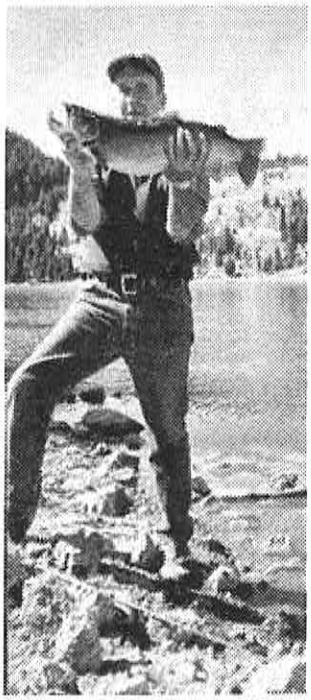
CUTTHROAT

By "Swede" Troedsson

In 1992 the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) in southwestern Montana acquired 400 acres which they added to an area which now totals about 7800 acres called Axolotl Lakes. This area is located about 10 miles southwest of Ennis, MT, and is classified by the BLM as a Wilderness Study Area (WSA).



Ron Primozic With Yellowstone Cutthroat

The area includes a beautiful cabin. In about 2004 the BLM turned the cabin into a rental cabin for public use. The cabin overlooks Twin Lakes. Reservoir Lake is also located in the area. Three additional lakes (Grassy, Axolotl and Blue Lake) are also within the WSA. Motorized access is permitted into the cabin and on a few other limited routes. The rest of the area is walk-in only.

In September 2003, my friend Ron Primozic and I hiked about two miles into Axolotl Lake. After lunch Ron prepared to go fishing. I decided to take a nap.

I'd no sooner dozed off when I was awakened to Ron shouting he had a big one on his line (which he'd hooked on his third cast). He had hooked into a huge Yellowstone Cutthroat!

We took the fish to the nearby fish hatchery to get it weighed and measured. It weighed 9¼ lbs, was 24 inches in length, and 16¼ inches in girth.

Grand Opening of the Beaverhead County Museum

Please mark your calendars for the Grand Opening of the Beaverhead County Museum on June 14 beginning at 5:30 p.m. New exhibits are in display at the original Museum building and refreshments will be served on the patio of the 1909 Union Pacific Depot. Please plan to join us.

A MATTER OF MANNERS

by Alexandra Paskhaver

When I was little and we were having guests over, my mother would always have me set the table. The salad plate was on top of the dinner plate. The fork was on the left.

And since the salad was always wilted, the knife was in the best position to stab the cook. That is to say, on the right.

I look back fondly on those days, even when I was the one who made the salads.

While we never had white-tie dinners or anything like that, it was cool to see Dad wear a collared shirt to something besides work.

Now we don't go through those sorts of formalities at dinner parties. People say they constrain conversation. It's hard to be natural in a suit.

It's much more natural for folks to show up in T-shirts, work through a few Heinekens, and try to kiss the dog.

We're happier that way. Overly stiff rules of etiquette, and overly stiff collars, may be worse than overly loose ones.

When I was in kindergarten, the teachers taught everyone how to blow one's nose the right way. The way we did it, we made Emily Post look like a boor.

Today we teach children more important things, like how two and two make 22.

Or is it four? Look, I didn't go over that in school. But I do know how to make candles, just in case anyone wants to go back to the 1800s. Any takers? No?

I get it. Really, I do. The modern world requires different things. It's good we're teaching children how to live in it. I mean that without irony.

It's no longer useful to pore over the classics and be a class act pouring a drink. Or maybe it's the other way around.

My day job is in technology. Forget high hats, arrow collars, and white spats. It's a miracle if my coworkers show up in anything more impressive than pajamas.

Even if I don't have a fancy ballgown, I have a roof over my head. I have loads of important things that I wouldn't have had 100 years ago, like voting rights, and also Netflix.

Modern jobs are better than in the past, too. I spend time in a cushy chair instead of a coal mine. Working in technology means I get to cut my teeth on interesting problems.

For example, how to eat all the free pizza in the office without my boss noticing.

But if I'm eating pizza, I'm certainly not throwing fancy dinner parties.

The days of setting tables and wearing formal clothes to supper are long behind me. Sometimes I doubt whether they ever existed in the first place.

That world, half-real or half-imagined, has disappeared for good.

It'd be backward to have things backward. No matter by what standard you measure things, it's better to be alive now than at any other time.

But every now and then I wonder if we haven't left something behind, something more substantial than a top hat or an umbrella.

If you'll excuse me, I'm going to go blow my nose the right way.
