Virginia City recognized for achievements as a 'Bear Smart' Community

Thanks to community-wide planning and effort to secure food attractants, and with help from partner organizations, Virginia City has become a model city in nearly eliminating conflicts with bears in town.

Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks recognized Virginia City as a Bear Smart Community in an award ceremony.

The southwestern Montana town is well within occupied habitat for black bears and grizzlies and has seen many black bears that move through town. Historically, bears would sometimes find unsecured garbage and other attractants in the town, leading to habituated and food-conditioned bears and subsequent property damage.

In 2017, however, the nonprofit organization People and Carnivores began working with Virginia City to upgrade the town's infrastructure to reduce conflicts with bears. Those efforts soon began paying off in significantly reducing conflicts.

Seeing a reduction in conflicts, Virginia City began setting aside some of its tourism-based income for Bear Smart efforts. This included a needs assessment, planning and continuing efforts to secure waste and other attractants, as well as hosting an annual bear safety event.

In the last year, Virginia City also passed an ordinance establishing a Bear Smart Community Committee, which leads and continues to carry out conflict reduction efforts. Thanks to the commitment of Virginia City residents, conflicts with bears in town have dropped to near zero.

What is a Bear Smart community?

Becoming a Bear Smart Community is a community-led and community-wide initiative to prevent conflicts with bears. It follows a framework developed by the Interagency Grizzly Bear Committee. The framework includes four components:

- Establishing a committee or working group that is representative of community stakeholders to lead efforts to reduce conflicts between humans and bears.
- Conducting a community assessment to understand existing conflicts and their causes, the local landscape, and stakeholder attitudes toward bears and conflicts.
- Creating a management plan based on the assessment findings.
- Implementing the management plan.

This process can be complex and may take years to implement. It requires support from businesses and residents to address attractants like unsecured garbage, as well as to build sustainable funding systems to keep efforts going. Members of Bear Smart communities also continuously educate businesses, residents and visitors on how to be bear aware at work, at home and while recreating.

"Virginia City has put in a tremendous amount of work to reduce human-bear conflicts, and they've shown dedication to continuing their efforts," said Kim Johnston, High Divide Field Manager for People and Carnivores.

The Ranger's Cabin

Bryce Angell

The higher mountain, autumn air came early with a bite. We made our stop at the ranger station cabin for the night.

The outpost cabin's Franklin Stove was ready for a fire. We chopped some kindling, lit a match, and watched the flames grow higher.

We warmed our hands, then held our boots above the stove for heat. I finally rubbed some circulation back to my cold feet.

The rustic old guard station was now feeling toasty warm. We'd stay here for the night and weather out the mountain storm.

Our Coleman propane lantern gave us precious light to see. It must have been nostalgia, at least a feeling over me.

I gazed around the quarters, not a plug-in on the wall. No internet to check on and no cell phone use at all.

I only could imagine 'bout this cabin long ago. Two rangers eating biscuits, prob'ly made from sourdough.

One ranger was much older. He was tall and extra lean. His face was weather chiseled, didn't show an ounce of mean.

The other ranger, young in years, yet smart enough to know he could profit more from listening than just to talk for show.

Were they eating steaks of venison or rations from canned beef? Did the younger get a sip of gin that later caused him grief?

Did they talk about their lives out in the vastness all alone? The older ranger said this was the only life he'd known.

I'm sure he told the young buck, "Just keep thinkin' 'bout your work. Those gals are mighty pretty, but they'll drive you plumb berserk!"

They finished eating supper. The oldest rolled a Bull Durham smoke. The younger ranger moved on back. Tobacco made him choke.

They washed and dried the dishes. Dumped the coffee from the pot. Then they turned in for the evening, sleeping bag and army cot.

The rangers used the cabin for their safety and for rest. Now it's used for recreation. Did the rangers ever guess?

Has the cabin seen life's changes from the day that it was new? And does it miss the rangers over men like me and you?

Bulldog Athletics - Sept. 30 - Oct. 6

CROSS COUNTRY – The Bulldog men's and women's cross country teams get back to racing this week with a race on Oct. 4 at the Frontier Conference Preview Meet hosted by Rocky Mountain College. The races are set to start at 12:30 p.m. Friday afternoon at Amend Park.

VOLLEYBALL – The no. 13 ranked Montana Western Volleyball team (10-5) continue their Frontier Conference slate this week after going 1-1 on the week last week. Senior setter Kaylee Fritz served up two aces in the 3-1 win over the Battlin' Bears on Thursday, marking her place in the UMW record books as she broke the career service ace record that was previously held by Paige Latimer (2011-14). The Bulldogs then traveled to Butte, Mont. and lost 3-1 in a tough match with the Montana Tech Orediggers.

This upcoming week, the Bulldogs get a second chance at the RV Carroll College Fighting Saints at home on Thursday evening at 7 p.m. They will then travel to Havre, Mont. where they will face the MSU-Northern Skylights for the second time this season.

Statewide Grizzly Bear Management Plan

Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks released the final Statewide Grizzly Bear Management Plan, wrapping up an extensive public process analyzing how the state intends to manage the iconic species while it's federally protected and after it is turned over to state management.

"The recovery of grizzly bears in Montana is an amazing conservation success story for Montanans, particularly those who have learned to live with bears as numbers have expanded over the last two decades," said FWP Director Dustin Temple. "This success story also proves again that FWP is committed to managing for healthy wildlife populations across our diverse landscape."

The statewide Grizzly Bear Management Plan outlines how FWP plans to manage grizzly bears where they exist today, to include areas between the four recovery zones in Montana: the Northern Continental Divide Ecosystem (NCDE), the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem (GYE), the Bitterroot Ecosystem and the Cabinet-Yaak Ecosystem. The plan prioritizes connectivity between ecosystems and working with people and communities to avoid conflicts with bears.

"This management plan, and the regulatory framework already in place, proves our commitment to keeping grizzly bear numbers healthy and sustainable," Temple said.

Grizzly bears in Montana are currently listed as threatened under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). However, Montana has petitioned to remove ESA protections from bears in the NCDE and has supported Wyoming in petitioning to remove ESA protections from bears in the GYE.

The statewide management plan replaces two existing management plans – those for western Montana and for southwest Montana – with one statewide plan. The plan recognizes that connectivity between populations of bears is an important part of their continued conservation. That connectivity can be aided with outreach and education to help communities and homeowners understand the value of securing attractants and avoiding conflicts.

"People in Montana bring a lot of different values to the table when it comes to grizzly bears," said Quentin Kujala, Chief of Conservation Policy for FWP. "But we know that helping people avoid conflicts with bears and educating them on how to live and recreate safely in bear country is critical."

For FWP, grizzly bear management will continue to center on three main areas of focus: conflict management, research and monitoring, and education and outreach.

Along with the final management plan, the final Environmental Impact Statement was released earlier this month. Additionally, FWP also released a new online dashboard to allow the public to see annual grizzly bear mortalities across the state.

FWP reminds hunters to dispose of animal carcasses properly Dumping carcasses is illegal and can spread disease

Every year, Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks staff find big game animal carcasses dumped on public and private land. Carcass dumping is illegal and can spread disease. This hunting season, protect our herds and make sure you have a plan to properly dispose of animal carcasses.

Under Montana state statute, dumping carcasses on public and private land without the owner's consent is considered littering and can result in fines not exceeding $500. Conviction of littering while hunting can also result in the suspension of hunting and fishing privileges for one year.

Dumping carcasses can also increase the spread of diseases, including chronic wasting disease (CWD). CWD is a 100 percent fatal disease that can infect deer, elk and moose and has been in Montana since 2017. The disease is caused by deformed proteins called prions that cause neurological damage and eventual death. Live infected animals spread prions through bodily fluids such as feces, urine and saliva. After an infected animal dies, prions can exist in the environment for years and continue infecting other animals.

In 2021, the Fish & Wildlife Commission approved a new rule restricting carcass disposal in Montana due to growing concerns over the spread of CWD. Carcass parts, such as brain, eyes, spleen, lymph glands, and spinal cord material, from hunter harvested and vehicle-killed salvaged deer, elk and moose should be left at the kill site when possible. If the entire animal is transported for taxidermy or meat processing, the carcass must be bagged and disposed of in a Class II landfill. A carcass may be transported within the state regardless of where it was harvested if the carcass parts are disposed of in a Class II landfill after butchering and processing.

Hunters are prohibited from wasting any part of a game animal that is suitable for food. Under Montana state statute, "suitable for food" includes all of the four quarters above the hock, including the loin and backstrap, of every game animal, excluding mountain lions.

To protect our herds and ensure Montana's hunting heritage can continue, dispose of animal carcasses properly. Learn more about CWD management here: fwp.mt.gov/cwd.
