Press Release from Dillon Elementary School District #10 Regarding Mock Drill on Wednesday, November 6th at 1:00 p.m.

The Dillon Elementary School District would like to pass along some important information pertaining to an upcoming event.

The Dillon Elementary School Crisis team, in conjunction with community agencies and partners, has organized a "mock" 'Active Shooter Response Training Drill' for the afternoon of Wednesday, November 6th. The District is required to practice various drills throughout the year. Unlike other drills, this "mock" drill will involve various community emergency personnel and agencies such as law enforcement, fire department, hospital personnel, and ambulance services. This drill is being conducted in alliance with these community partners so that we may all practice.

Students will have an early release that afternoon and will be released at 12:00 noon on Wednesday, November 6th and the "mock" drill will take place in the afternoon with staff only in attendance.

The goal of the District Crisis Team is for our students, staff, and community emergency personnel to be prepared in case of such an emergency. Practice helps accomplish that goal.

Our District Crisis Team and I would like to thank Jason Grimmer, Director of Security at the University of Montana Western; Tom Wagenknecht, Beaverhead County Disaster and Emergency Services; Mike Reid, Chancellor at the University of Montana Western, Dillon Police Chief Jeremy Alvarez, Beaverhead County Sheriff Dave Wendt, Dillon Fire Chief BJ Klose, our local EMT's and Barrett Hospital personnel as well as Beaverhead County Health Officials for their collaboration and expertise.

Sincerely, Randy Shipman
Superintendent, Dillon Elementary School District #10

CWD detected for first time in elk in Ruby Mountains

Hunters encouraged to continue submitting samples for CWD testing

Chronic wasting disease was recently detected in an elk on the north end of the Ruby Mountains in Hunting District 322.

CWD is a contagious neurological disease that infects mule deer, white-tailed deer, elk and moose. It's always fatal, and there is no known cure. It was first detected in Montana's wild herds in 2017.

A hunter harvested the CWD-positive elk adjacent to the lower Ruby Valley, where CWD has been observed at high prevalence locally in both white-tailed and mule deer. While this is the first time CWD has been detected in elk in the Ruby Mountains, it was expected to eventually occur given the presence of the disease among deer populations that use the same habitats.

Sampling from hunter-harvested animals indicates CWD prevalence likely remains low in elk in the area.

It's unlikely this detection will result in changes to elk hunting regulations in this area, which already has liberal harvest regulations for elk. Hunters can help wildlife managers monitor CWD by continuing to submit samples from harvested animals.

Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks has a variety of resources to help hunters get their harvested animals tested for CWD, including tutorials for taking and submitting samples themselves, as well as sampling stations where FWP staff are available to help.

Hunting is the primary tool for monitoring and managing the spread of CWD. Concerns over CWD shouldn't stop hunters from enjoying hunting season. Hunters are critical to conservation efforts across the state, including CWD management.

Hunters can help slow the spread of CWD by disposing of animal carcasses properly after harvesting the meat. This includes leaving carcass remains at the kill site or bagging the carcass and disposing of it in a Class II landfill.

There is no known transmission of CWD to humans. However, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommends that hunters harvesting deer, elk or moose from an area where CWD is known to exist have their animal tested prior to consuming the meat, and do not consume the meat if the animal tests positive.

To learn more, visit fwp.mt.gov/CWD.

Attorney General Knudsen launches investigation into pediatric group for misleading puberty blocker guidelines

Montana Attorney General Austin Knudsen led a coalition of 12 attorneys general in launching an investigation today into the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) for sharing misleading and deceptive statements that ignore the long-term and harmful consequences of using puberty blockers to treat children with gender dysphoria.

While medical reports show that puberty blockers can have irreversible effects on children which include compromised bone density; neurocognitive development interference; and, in some cases, even cause infertility and sterility, the AAP continues to tout the effects of puberty blockers as "reversible." The AAP's statements could be a violation of Montana's Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act because the organization is providing misleading and deceptive information to Montanans.

"Puberty blockers can have serious and irreversible consequences for children, but AAP appears to ignore those consequences and instead promotes them as 'reversible.' That's unacceptable and could be a violation of Montana law," Attorney General Knudsen said. "The information AAP provides must be accurate and based in scientific fact as parents and medical professionals rely on them for guidance in making healthcare decisions for children."

Even though scientific evidence does not support the AAP's claims, the organization has doubled down on their deceptive messaging. In their 2018 gender-affirming care policy statement, the organization claims that the effects of treating minors with puberty blockers is "reversible." Then "reaffirmed" that claim in 2023. Meanwhile, even the World Health Organization has refused to endorse puberty blockers as treatment for gender dysphoria.

Attorney General Knudsen also joined a coalition of 21 states in September demanding answers from AAP to determine if the organization is in violation of state consumer protection laws for their misleading statements regarding puberty blockers. However, the attorneys general have not received a response which led to the launch of this formal investigation.

"The AAP has no basis to assure parents that giving their children puberty blockers can be fully reversed. It just isn't true," the attorneys general wrote in their September letter.
