Shall we salute night-shift workers?

Tyrades! by Danny Tyree

My wife's sister and her husband have for years both worked third shift (a.k.a. "the graveyard shift"), and they seem to be in good company.

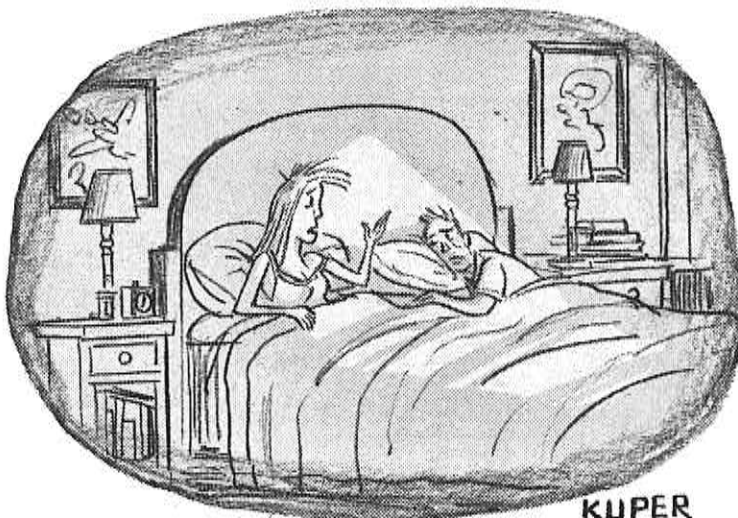

About 20 percent of the full-time workforce in the United States participates in some form of shift work (second shift, third shift, rotating shifts, shifting the blame, shifting to share their flatulence, whatever).

Unfortunately, as many as 40 percent of those workers suffer from Shift Work Sleep Disorder, which can manifest itself as insomnia, uneven sleep, drowsiness at inappropriate times, hypertension and severe irritability. ("I don't care if they're dead! Exhume Fred Rogers and Mother Teresa so I can share a few choice words with them!")

As you've probably surmised, sleep disorders come about because nontraditional work hours wreak havoc on humans' circadian rhythm. Yes, our "internal clock" and hormones expect us to be active during daylight hours and zonked out at night. If nature abhors a vacuum, it downright goes to town with a Louisville Slugger on poor jokers who just want to earn a living after midnight.

It's not just biology. Needing to sleep in the daytime is like blood in the water attracting sharks. Neighbor Jones decides to crank up a diesel lawnmower for his AstroTurf lawn. Door-to-door salesmen come by hawking solar-powered anvils. Faulty GPS leads homecoming parades down cul-de-sacs. And so forth.

Fires, crime, medical emergencies and production quotas refuse to be boxed in by a "9 to 5" mindset, so we'll always need late-shift workers; but I've endured more than my share of the schedule.

I spent the last 8 years of bachelorhood and the first six years of married life working third shift. It was fun for a year or two, but the lifestyle began to take its toll. (I would've dodged the toll booth, but I locked my keys in the car a heck of a lot back then.)

Sure, I would've coped better if I had maintained the same sleep schedule seven days a week; but I tried to live like "normal" people on the weekend, for the sake of visiting in-laws, helping with family projects and attending church. (I hope that someday I will hear, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant — for resisting the strong temptation to replace communion grape juice with an energy drink.")

Why do people work odd shifts? Some do it because of the shift differential in pay or the flexibility of running errands. Some do it because some codger of a co-worker is hanging onto their coveted first-shift job for dear life. ("I won't abandon my post again. The last time I did, poor Custer...I don't want to talk about it...")

Sometimes it's inertia. You start out on nights "temporarily" and the years fly by without your breaking free of the habit. ("I had a string tied around my finger to remind me to apply for a day job, but that's the finger I lost to the yawn skill saw, darn it.")

And, of course, the more casual pace is a big selling point. Not so many supervisors, bean-counters and visitors underfoot. The "suits" are in their jammies. The "undercover boss" is literally wrapped snugly in his security blanket.

Whatever their motivation, say "thank you" to those dedicated night-shift workers.

"Thank you" and not "Oh, I'm glad you're up...sort of. I wanted to ask where you buy your 'Do Not Disturb' signs..."

Montana Western Student Raina Mortenson Appointed as MUS Student Regent

The University of Montana Western is proud to announce that Raina Mortenson has been appointed as a Student Regent for the Montana University System (MUS) Board of Regents. A dedicated advocate for her peers, Mortenson now holds a pivotal role in shaping policies that impact universities across the state.

"The student regent is a voting member of the board, which oversees the Montana University System, including MSU, UM, Northern, MSUB, Western, and the community colleges," Mortenson said. "We make decisions that impact all of those campuses."

Her appointment holds deep significance, as she credits student support for her journey. "I always like to acknowledge the students who pushed me forward. They believed in me even when I didn't."

Applying for the position wasn't initially in her plans. A former student body president encouraged her to go for it. "I knew the previous student regent, Garrett, who was my student body president. He told me I should apply. At first, I thought—absolutely not. But with only two days left before the deadline, I decided—it's now or never."

After applying, Mortenson went through interviews with Montana Associated Students, which forwarded candidates to the governor for final selection. "I didn't think I would get it, but I feel so honored. Supporting students and voicing their needs is important because, in the end, everything we do should be for them."

As Student Regent, she attends Board of Regents meetings every three months, serves on two committees, and researches university issues to advocate for students. "Many regents aren't students themselves, so they don't always hear firsthand what's happening on campuses. Being able to share student perspectives is crucial."

Stepping into this leadership role was initially intimidating. "Sitting at a big table with many people while being recorded felt daunting at first. But now, I feel much more comfortable."

Mortenson's leadership journey began at Montana Western, where she first served as a student senator before becoming student body president. "Before I moved to Western, I wasn't really into student government. But once I got involved, I loved being around students, advocating for them, and being their voice."

Her time in student government helped her build confidence and leadership skills. "Being student body president changed how I viewed leadership. It gave me the confidence to express student concerns and push for solutions."

One of Mortenson's favorite aspects of Montana Western is its tight-knit community. "Since I've been here, I've felt such a strong sense of family and support. Everyone shows up and has your back—it's something really special."

For students looking to get involved, she offers simple advice: "Don't be average. If there's something you can do to better yourself and stand out, don't be afraid—just go for it."

With her passion for student advocacy and leadership, Mortenson is ready to make a lasting impact on Montana's higher education system.

Veteran's Corner Update #297
 By Mike Lawson

Veteran News Updates:

- Many of our Veteran Organizations get together for dinner meetings, SOS breakfasts, etc. which are good social fun times together in these winter months. The American Legion this past Wednesday had a member make a delicious stew and the Auxiliary ladies brought dessert and salads. We do this monthly event the 3rd Wed of the month at 6:30 pm. The public is invited and for $10.00 you can't beat it, so please put it on your calendar.
- This is Independence Awareness Month. The VA is highlighting a variety of resources to help senior Veterans live independently and live well. This is important for Veterans who want to age in place in their own homes. Some VA resources to check are the following: 1) Veteran Decision Aid (2) Veteran Directed Care (3) Palliative Care (4) Adult Day Health Care. The VHA also offers a wide range of community resources on line, over the phone and in-person to help the veteran find support and address specific needs: 1) Benefits Checkup is free (2) Elder Care Locator and Family Care Navigator (3) National Aging and Disability Transportation Center. Speak with your primary care provider and see if you are eligible for geriatric and extended care services. Visit the VA Geriatrics and Extended Care website.
- The deadline for VA's online sign-in changes has been extended until March 4th, 2025. This is to enable you the veteran, to get your new, secure login.gov or ID.me account. You'll still be able to use your MyHealtheVet portal, but will just need to sign in to it with login.gov or ID.me account.
- Many Veterans and their families are on a TRICARE Health Plan. They have a cost page for your one stop cost related needs. To learn more go to www.tricare.mil/costs

As I bring this to a close I would caution you who live in our part of the world to please be careful on the dangerous icy ground we have to walk on when we leave our vehicles. Take baby-steps and watch where you step. Folks have fallen and many times broken bones are the result of that fall. It's especially critical as we get older and our bones aren't as strong as when we were younger. Let's take care of what we have left. Amen!
