Host Speaker Matthew Swarr

The University of Montana Western Environmental Science Department is proud to host Matthew Swarr as part of the "On the Rocks" lecture series. Swarr will present "Exploring the Evolution of Water Resources in the Western U.S. Using Space Geodesy" on Wednesday, March 26, from 4:00-5:00 p.m. in UMW's Lucy Carson Library.

Matthew Swarr is currently a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Montana studying water resources using geophysics. His research uses high-precision GPS (the same technology your phone uses!) to measure changes in the Earth's shape produced by gains and losses of water storage near the Earth's surface. His research has taken him all over the western U.S., from the deeply wooded Bitterroot Mountains of Idaho to the high peaks of the Sierra Nevada.

Presentation Abstract:

Mountainous regions act as natural "water towers" by capturing freshwater during winter months and delivering it to low-elevation communities through streamflow generation and subsurface groundwater flow. However, the western U.S., coming out of the driest 20-year period of the last 1,200 years, faces challenges in that persistent declines in mountain water storage have been observed across the region over the past two decades, driven by warming air temperatures and variable winter conditions.

Initial forecasts indicate that climate change could further exacerbate mountain water loss, threatening the sustainability of ecosystems and impacting resources relied upon by our society. However, shifts in precipitation as a result of climate change are predicted to become increasingly variable in the coming years, potentially supporting water storage in mountainous regions through extreme precipitation events such as atmospheric rivers. These events can channel significant quantities of water vapor through the atmosphere before being deposited in mountainous regions.

Using high-precision Global Positioning System (GPS) surface displacements that reflect the solid Earth's deformation response to loading and unloading, we quantify changes in water storage within the western U.S. over the past two decades, identifying significant periods of drought and recovery. Using our GPS estimates of water storage, we infer changes in groundwater storage within the Sierra Nevada of California and the Cascade Range of California, Oregon, and Washington, finding diminishing groundwater to be the dominant source of long-term water storage loss within both regions.

Despite these findings, we find that periods of extreme precipitation, such as the winter of 2023, can significantly restore water lost during severe droughts. The gains associated with these wet periods are durable, persisting over several subsequent years despite modest winters following an extremely wet year. This indicates that brief but extreme precipitation events can provide refuge for adjacent lowland regions dependent upon mountain groundwater for several years post-event.

In a future with increasingly variable precipitation, the strong influence of these extreme events may act to maintain mountain groundwater, sustain ecosystem health, and buffer adjacent areas against drought conditions during dry periods.

Secretary Jacobsen's motion supporting $4.5 million oil and gas lease sale earns unanimous support

Montana Secretary of State Christi Jacobsen motioned during the March Land Board meeting to approve oil and gas lease sales in four Montana counties. The motion received unanimous support from her fellow Land Board colleagues and generated more than $4.5 million in revenue for Montana.

"This was another win-win for Montana and our schools," said Secretary Jacobsen. "Our past three oil and gas lease sales have generated nearly $13 million for our state, benefiting students across Montana."

This month's sale consisted of tracts in Blaine, Richland, Roosevelt, and Toole counties. One tract in Richland County received a nearly $2 million bid at more than $10,000 per acre, one of the highest ever, according to the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC).

The March Land Board meeting generated an estimated $5.1 million for Montana's trust beneficiaries. Secretary Jacobsen joined her colleagues in approving three timber sales and improvements to roads and power lines across the state.

FWP awards prize to participant in Hunter Landowner Stewardship Program

Nina Leckband has a brand-new pair of Leupold binoculars she won in a raffle after completing Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks' Hunter Landowner Stewardship Program (HLSP).

Late last year, FWP relaunched HLSP, which is an education program focused on educating hunters on safety, ethics, minimizing impacts to private lands, and tips for being a good steward on both private and public lands. The program is part of FWP's effort to help improve hunter/landowner relationships. For more information on this campaign, visit the FWP website.

HLSP participants watch a series of videos and then take as test. Once completed, the participant can print a certificate of completion and have the program attached to their FWP licensing account. This past year, participants who completed the program by Feb. 15, could enter a drawing to win a pair of binoculars, valued at $250, donated by Capital Sports in Helena and Leupold.

"Capital Sports was happy to offer a pair of binoculars as a prize for taking the Hunter Landowner Stewardship Program," said Ed Beall, chair of the Private Land/Public Wildlife Advisory Committee and owner of Capital Sports in Helena. "It's great to see hunters showing interest and taking their time to participate."

This year more than 400 hunters took the program.

It's important for hunters to educate themselves about the importance of respecting private landowners and following their rules, Leckband said.

"These opportunities would not be possible without their support, and it is our responsibility as hunters to respect their land," Leckband said.

Maintaining positive relationships between hunters and landowners is a critical part of Montana's culture and heritage. In many towns around the state, these relationships extend well beyond hunting season as landowners and hunters share a commitment to their communities and ways of life.

"Speaking on behalf of the PLPW council, the recently updated Hunter Landowner Stewardship video course is something we are really excited to see FWP roll out," Beall said.

FWP staff are updating the program and will have it ready for hunters to take later this year near the start of the 2025 hunting season.
