UMW Alumna and Law School Graduate Rylee
Dolven Shares Her Post-Graduation Experience

Rylee Dolven, a 2017 graduate of the University of Montana Western with a Bachelor of Arts in Psychology, returned to campus to speak with students about her journey after graduation. Rylee earned her law degree from the University of Idaho College of Law in 2021 and now works for a civil litigation firm in Boise, Idaho.

Prior to her current role, she served as a law clerk for the first female federal district judge in Idaho. This opportunity gave her firsthand insight into the legal profession at the federal level. As a young alumna, Rylee offered a relatable and inspiring perspective to students considering law school or exploring alternative paths after earning a humanities degree. While her undergraduate major was in psychology, she chose not to pursue the more traditional counseling route. Instead, she used the critical thinking, writing, and research skills she developed at Montana Western to succeed in law school.

Rylee credits the academic rigor at Montana Western, particularly the guidance of professors like Dr. Heather Haas, for preparing her for the demands of legal education. She explained how the university's unique block schedule helped her develop discipline, focus, and effective outlining skills. These tools became essential throughout her legal studies. The immersive nature of the block system, she said, reflected the fast-paced and intensive environment of law school.

Originally from a small town in Idaho, Rylee said that Dillon offered a perfect transition. She appreciated that Montana Western provided a small-campus, private-college atmosphere while remaining a public institution. That sense of community and the structure of the block schedule helped her stay engaged and committed to her goals.

To students considering law school, Rylee offered the following advice:

"Network on campus. Find a mentor who has experience helping students get into law school and who can guide you while also serving as a sounding board. Take hard classes, even if the only reason is that they are hard. Push yourself. Learn that you can be challenged and still succeed. Law school will expect that of you every day, so it is important to start building those habits now."

Rylee added that she wishes she had better understood the time commitment law school requires before attending. However, she noted that "law school is only as much of a time commitment as you make it," emphasizing the importance of self-discipline and time management.

Community Planner Gus Byrom to Retire After 47 Years of Public Service

Leaves statewide legacy of commitment to community development

In the summer of 1971, Gus Byrom joined a team of fellow UC Boulder students studying the impact of the proposed 1976 Olympic games on Colorado's small towns. In the process of examining the infrastructure challenges of hosting the Olympics, Byrom discovered a new career path. Though he graduated with majors in history and political science, that study changed everything.

"That was a turning point in my life, when I became aware of city planning as a profession," Byrom said. "So many people have no idea that it's a career option."

Byrom got his bachelor's degree from UC Boulder in 1972, then earned a master's degree in urban planning from Texas A&M in 1973. He consulted for four years with a Denver city planning firm until 1978, when he was hired at the city/county planning department in Helena. From 1979 to June 1986, he was the planning director for Helena and Lewis & Clark County. He joined the Montana Department of Commerce in December 1986.

After 47 years of public service, over 38 with Commerce, Byrom is retiring. Besides leaving behind an office filled with city planning maps and grant application guidelines, he's leaving a legacy of commitment to community development in Montana.

Galen Steffens, administrator of Commerce's Community MT Division, said, "Gus is always available to help communities and team members troubleshoot issues as they arise, work together to complete a common goal and provide words of encouragement when someone is having a rough day. He has shown time and time again how we as state employees should approach our work and help others."

From 1986 to about 2014, Byrom worked on the Community Development Block Grant program. He was program manager from 1990 to 2014 and remained involved in CDBG. In 2018, Byrom received the Friends of Rural Water Award from Montana Rural Water Systems. In 2024, HUD recognized Byrom's commitment to the CDBG program with a Lifetime Achievement award.

The decades have been packed with projects benefitting Montana communities. Some were funded by CDBG grants, others by the Montana Coal Endowment.

Byrom recalled an early project in St. Regis. "My wife and I pulled into the main café and gas station, and they had a big sign on the door: 'Septic tank problems, café is closed.' You can imagine how devastating that is. At the height of the tourist season, the main gas station and café in town have to be closed because they can't handle the tourist activity."

Byrom and his colleagues worked with St. Regis and the U.S. Department of Agriculture to build a wastewater treatment plant. Today, it's a thriving, rural community. He said, "If it hadn't been for CDBG, we wouldn't have gotten a wastewater collection system going in St. Regis."

With so many small towns to help, anyone would be overwhelmed by the job. "That's where I fall back on my personal faith, and then just keep doing," Byrom said. "I'm always inspired by Winston Churchill in May 1940, when the British forces were bottled up at Dunkirk. Churchill said, 'We're not going to give up. Never, never, never, never give up.'"

Byrom's spirits never stayed down for long. He said, "It's been a fantastic job, because you're working with people that really care about their communities. That's the greatest part of this job, working with Montana people and their communities." Byrom was quick to give credit to the people he's worked with throughout the years. He recalled Newell Anderson, the division administrator for many years. Anderson used to say, "Government has to work. The alternative is unacceptable." Byrom also credited Dave Cole, who set up Montana's CDBG program in the early 1980s and was responsible for CDBG until retiring in 2010.

"Those people were critical," Byrom said. "Nine tenths of what I pass on to all the new people I've been working with, it's what I've learned from Newell and Dave. I'm just one employee that's happened to be here quite a few years. They're all fantastic people I work with. They're very, very dedicated." To whomever takes on the challenge of filling Byrom's shoes, he said, "Just jump in, and do the right thing. Montana's a fantastic state. Stick with state government. We need the best people we can get."

On how he's planning to spend his retirement, Byrom said, "I'll see where the Lord will guide me. I hope to still be involved in community development activities, and with my church and friends and family. I'll see what's next. I love my job so much, but I'll always be available to help people if they have questions. We still have so many projects underway. I'll just keep going until I've got to go."

Byrom's last day at Commerce is June 2, 2025.
