City Government Management:

By: MJ

I have been watching the disagreements between our local government officials and the council members. Appears to be looking like the W.D.C. political ways have come to Dillon. If you have been attending or zooming meetings one might say these are tumultuous times for the city government. It's as if the local government elected personal are having problems with rules or regulations. Holding people accountable, transparency issues, discarding contractual agreements, ignoring laws for the bidding process when hiring people to do projects over $80,000 being done on behalf of city... Why?

NEWSBREAK: I read a letter from Ms. Stacy Reynolds, Clerk and Recorder/Election Administrator that took voting rights away from Mr. Raymond Graham by disputing his residency. Question: Have your voting rights been taken away also? Yes/No. All candidates, except one, have been disqualified by Ms. Reynolds thus allowing one (1) candidate for mayor to be voted on. With the flick of the pen Ms. Stacey Reynolds has voted for you. If Mr. Graham would win, he could not take office because he has no voting rights. Question: Is it okay to use 'character assassination' and 1 person's 'opinions' on what the law says when taking away our constitutional given voting rights? I agree that the laws must be followed by all. It is my opinion that everyone has a right to a fair decision via the justice system, not one person.

Petition: Two (2) "Affidavit of Individual Challenging on Elector" petitions were circulated by Alica and Eric Wendland. Half ± signees do not live in Dillon. Ms. Stacy Reynolds ruled against Mr. Eric Wendland's first petition because of lack of information so Mrs. Alica Wendland filed another petition to gather extended information. Question: What other information did Ms. Reynolds acquire to make her decision with?

Many people living outside city limits, do not pay city taxes, so not pay for infrastructure or have right to vote in city elections, have cast your vote for you by signing a petition. Question: Why is it important for the county & County Commissioners to affect city elections? What is happening behind closed doors?

Note: The Wendland's are the people asking Dillon to pay approximately half million dollars for a street put into their private sub-division.

Bozeman Symphony Presents Symphony
Storytime Featuring the Steel Pan Drum

The Bozeman Symphony invites children and families to a special Symphony Storytime featuring the steel pan drum on Wednesday, Aug. 13, at 10:15 a.m. at the Bozeman Public Library. Presented in partnership with the Library's Toddler and Preschool Storytime, this free, interactive program blends lively storytelling with the wonder of live music, creating a joyful experience especially for children ages 3 to 5.

The morning's adventure will feature Bozeman Symphony percussionist Kris Olsen and Montana Shakespeare in the Parks Associate Artistic Director Riley O'Toole as the guest reader. Together, they will bring a story to life through the magical combination of words and music. Following the reading, Olsen will introduce children to the unique sounds of the steel pan drum with a short, hands-on performance. Families can also mark their calendars for the next Symphony Storytime of the season on Wednesday, Sept. 17, at 10:15 a.m. at the Bozeman Public Library.

For more information about Symphony Storytime and the Bozeman Symphony's education and community engagement programs, visit www.bozemansymphony.org or call 406-585-9774.

Mother Nature Is Out to Sting Me by Tom Purcell

I've learned the hard way that Mother Nature is anything but weak and feeble.

I bought a house in the country a little over 30 years ago — a total fixer-upper. An old couple had lived there — hoarders — and the place was a mess.

But that didn't trouble me. I was full of energy. I had big improvement plans. Then I learned how ruthless Mother Nature really is.

I first discovered this when I tore off an old porch enclosure. When I began peeling the siding off, I was attacked by hornets and wasps — I eventually uncovered 80 nests! — which sent me swatting, jumping and cussing throughout my yard.

When the first summer arrived, I decided to build a planter in front of my house. I tore out some old shrubs and jagger bushes and came across a nest of ground bees. Ground bees become very angry when they are disturbed.

The nasty little buggers stung me a half-dozen times.

Following advice from a neighbor, I poured gasoline into the nest. I set the canister on the ground, four feet away. I lit a match, but before I could throw it into the nest, I heard Woooooooooooooof!

You see, "woof" is the sound gasoline makes when it ignites. It ignites because gasoline gives off fumes, and fumes — I tend to learn things the hard way — are flammable!

Suddenly, an 8-foot flame shot out of the bee's nest — right up the side of my newly painted house! To my right, I noticed the gas can — filled with 2½ gallons of premium — was on fire.

Thinking quickly, I picked up the canister and ran down my driveway, cussing. I launched the Molotov cocktail into the air. It exploded into a fireball. I raced for the hose and barely managed to douse both fires before I burned down the neighborhood.

I moved to Washington, D.C. in 1998 and rented out my house for many years before moving back to finish off all renovation projects.

Last week I was putting my tractor away in the shed after dark when I got stung a dozen times by hornets I didn't see, who, I now know, live in a large nest.

Thanks to my forever war with stinging insects, I chuckle when I hear environmentalists describe Mother Nature as feeble and weak.

As author Michael Crichton once said, the idea that nature is "fragile" is profoundly wrong. Earth has survived asteroid strikes, supervolcanoes, magnetic pole reversals and mass extinctions. Long after we're gone, Crichton said, the planet will still be here — doing just fine.

Scientist Bjorn Lomborg agrees. He doesn't deny the environmental challenges we face, but says we need perspective. While problems like climate change and pollution are real, he argues they're often exaggerated in ways that lead to panic instead of practical solutions.

He says that nature is remarkably resilient — forests regrow after wildfires, wildlife returned to Chernobyl and coral reefs have shown signs of recovery. Lomborg believes innovation, adaptation and economic growth are better paths forward than fear and alarmism.

We absolutely must be good stewards of Mother Nature's beauty and preserve her resources.

Just know that Mother Nature will flood your basement, infest your walls, sting your backside and burn down your house — then go on about her day like nothing happened.

If that sounds fragile to you, I've got a hornet's nest the size of an Airbnb you can borrow.

LOSS, LONELINESS, AND HEALING: HOW OLDER ADULTS EXPERIENCE AND OVERCOME GRIEF

Grief is a natural response to loss, encompassing a range of emotional, physical, and psychological reactions. For older adults, the experience of grief can be particularly complex due to the accumulation of losses and the unique challenges associated with aging.

UNDERSTANDING GRIEF IN OLDER ADULTS

As individuals age, they may encounter multiple significant losses within a short timeframe. For instance, the death of a spouse can lead to not only the loss of a life partner but also changes in financial stability and social connections. Additionally, aging often brings about other forms of loss, such as declining health, reduced independence, and the conclusion of long-held roles like career positions. Sometimes, losses in different areas of life can come in quick succession, not leaving a person enough time to process any individual loss. These cumulative losses can result in what researchers refer to as "bereavement overload", an effect that can be overwhelming.

SUPPORTING GRIEVING OLDER ADULTS

Providing support to older adults experiencing grief involves several key actions:

- Companionship: Spending time together, whether through shared activities or regular communication, can alleviate feelings of loneliness and reduce the negative effects of social isolation.
- Therapy: In some cases, grief can trigger serious mental health challenges like depression and anxiety. Referring a struggling loved one to a therapist or a mental health program can help them learn the skills to cope with their grief and manage other mental health burdens.
- Open Conversations: Encouraging discussions about the deceased loved one can validate the grieving person's feelings and assist in processing the loss.
- Assistance with Daily Tasks: Offering help with routine activities can ease the burden during a challenging time and ensure that the individual's basic needs are met.

Our hospital-based outpatient program meets the unique needs of older adults experiencing depression and/or anxiety. Anyone can make a referral to our program, including self-referrals, provider referrals, or community consultations.
