Search and Rescue Report

On 6-28 SAR was called out at 6:11 AM to respond to 911 distress call from a hiker on the Continental Divide trail. The hiker was unprepared for the 8+" of snow that fell and was worried about hypothermia. The hiker was able to reach 911 via cell phone and relay coordinates. 4 hasty teams were dispatched with combination of UTV's, ATV's, and a Jeep. Slick & snowy conditions created some challenges accessing the hiker but ultimately the hiker was rescued safely and returned to Dillon. 9 members responded with over 50 total man hours logged. Thanks to Adam Norlander, Josh Yeadon, Tara Remely, Brad Wagner, Zane Wood, Anthony Grant, Dusty Crowe, Trent Cottom and Kolby Malesich for responding.

A call to donate blood amid a critical shortage

by Tom Purcel

His neck and underarms were swollen. His skin itched, particularly on his arms. Sleeping at night was impossible.

His symptoms started when he was 50. Though he had been fit and healthy all his life, he had contracted chronic lymphocytic leukemia, or CLL, a cancer of the blood and bone marrow — the spongy tissue inside bones where blood cells are made, according to mayoclinic.org.

CLL affects a group of white blood cells called lymphocytes, which help the body fight infection. It produces abnormal, ineffective lymphocytes. The abnormal cells may eventually crowd out the healthy cells, killing the patient.

His first chemotherapy treatment eased his symptoms quickly. He was symptom-free for almost one year. But the abnormal cells continued to multiply.

His second chemo treatment staved them off for five more months — but the challenge with chemo is that the body quickly becomes resistant to it. Doctors have to apply different chemo blends to overcome resistance.

For the next few years, the different blends worked well — until November 2012, when his leukemia transformed from a chronic disease to a more aggressive form, acute myelogenous leukemia, or AML.

AML multiplies abnormal cells at an aggressive rate, posing a real concern for the patient.

But he still had hope.

All he needed was the right chemo treatment to stabilize the illness. Then he could receive a bone marrow transplant from a donor. That procedure would "help re-establish healthy stem cells by replacing unhealthy bone marrow with leukemia-free stem cells that would regenerate healthy bone marrow," according to mayoclinic.org.

He had a donor lined up and took a heavy dosage of chemo, but he did not stabilize. He lined up another donor and was almost ready for the transplant, but his body failed to stabilize again.

At that point, his doctors pulled out all the stops. They applied the most aggressive blends of chemo they had. But the AML resisted and got stronger.

Don Krieger passed away 13 years ago. He was my childhood friend — the big brother I, an only boy with five sisters, never had.

He was one of the funniest, most cheerful people you could ever meet. And all who knew him marveled at the grace and humor with which he fought that disease.

I write about him now because we can all do something to help people like him.

First, we can consider becoming bone marrow donors to help heal others like Don (go to marrow.org).

Second, we can donate blood on a regular basis. Patients like Don need blood transfusions almost daily, but there is a critical blood shortage right now.

Earlier this year, the American Red Cross reported that the national blood supply was down 35% — partly the result of extreme winter weather, which caused the cancellation of more than 400 blood drives.

Also, as America experienced its worst flu season in nearly 20 years, thousands of potential donors were sidelined.

Now we are in the midst of vacation season, when donors are typically few and far between — but we can buck that trend by visiting RedCrossBlood.org to schedule an appointment.

The least I can do to honor Don's sizable memory is donate a little blood.

Attorney General Knudsen announces new Forensic Science Division administrator

Attorney General Austin Knudsen announced today the appointment of Kimberly Kutch to the position of Forensic Science Division (FSD) administrator. Kutch brings 30 years of experience in a variety of both state and county government leadership positions to the role.

"I am pleased to welcome Kimberly to the Montana Department of Justice. Her leadership experience will be an asset to our team as she manages the state crime lab's day-to-day operations to support law enforcement's efforts to solve crimes and put criminals away," Attorney General Knudsen said. "There are high standards of forensic analysis that Montana's criminal justice system depends on, and I have no doubt she will deliver."

"I am honored to be selected by Attorney General Knudsen to lead FSD, and I am grateful for the opportunity to serve Montanans," Kutch said. "FSD has a critical role in the criminal justice community, and I will work to ensure it continues to do so effectively."

Prior to her appointment, Kutch held the position as a human services manager for Sarasota County, Florida. Throughout her career, she managed programs in criminal justice, child welfare, substance abuse and mental health, aging, and veterans' services. She has also managed contracts involving $846.7 million in federal and state funding, ensuring fiscal accountability and program integrity.

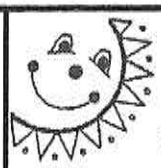

Kutch earned a Bachelor of Science in criminology, a Master of Science in Administration of criminal justice, a Master of Arts in mental health counseling, and an Education Specialist degree in school counseling.

Kutch is taking over for Travis Spinder who served as the administrator for FSD since 2021 and will return to his role as a Firearm and Toolmark Examiner.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Recently volunteers collected 50,892 signatures from Montana voters which qualified I-194, the Transparent Election Initiative, to appear on the ballot this fall. Here in Beaverhead County, we collected 636 signatures, which qualified our county and helped make this happen. It was encouraging to speak with so many of you through the process. We were grateful to get your perspectives and participate together in the democratic process.

In 2010, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in a case called Citizens United that corporations have the same free speech rights as individual Americans — including the right to spend money in our elections. Since then, out-of-state corporations and anonymous dark-money groups have poured billions into races across the country, including right here in Montana. Remember all the flyers and TV ads from the last election?

Here's the smart part of I-194: rights only matter if you have the power to use them. Rather than fighting the Supreme Court ruling head-on, this measure limits what corporations can do inside Montana. No power to act means no ability to flood our elections with outside money. Citizens United becomes irrelevant.

For Montana's small businesses, this levels a playing field that has been tilted against us for years. A ranch family or local hardware store can't write seven-figure checks to shape legislation. Out-of-state corporations and dark-money groups can — and do. Those dollars buy policies that favor corporate consolidation over local ownership, big ag over family farms, and chain stores over independent businesses.

Nothing in this measure touches your personal rights. You can still donate, volunteer, endorse, and speak your mind. Individuals are subject to financial limits and disclosure requirements (including billionaires) that help improve transparency in elections.
